INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers; important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (•). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.

2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.

3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.

4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.

5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fished product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquérir les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back.
Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

40Ar/39Ar dating of fluid migration in a Mississippi Valley-type deposit : the Gays River Zn-Pb deposit, Nova Scotia, Canada

By Daniel J. Kontak, Edward Farrar and Sandra L. McBride. Halifax : Dept. of Natural Resources, 1994. 17 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. In: Economic Geology : vol. 89, 1994. MICROLOG 95-06383 (1 fiche)

The Gays River zinc-lead deposit of southern Nova Scotia represents an example of the Mississippi Valley-type mineralization. The general simplicity of such deposits, combined with the generally low temperatures of the mineralizing fluids, make dating of the deposits difficult. However, the presence of a basal breccia unit within the deposit stratigraphy containing hydrothermally altered psammite and pelitic clasts in a mineralized dolostone matrix provides an opportunity to date fluid migration. This study reports the results of argon 40/argon 39 incremental step-heating experiments on the metasedimentary fragments and compares the results to recent paleomagnetic data for massive ore and barren host rock. The results indicate the feasibility of application of this technique to dating a Mississippi Valley-type deposit and the potential of the technique for application in tracing fluid migration in sedimentary basins. 40Ar/39Ar dating of metamorphic and igneous rocks of the Liscomb Complex, Meguma Terrane, southern Nova Scotia, Canada

By Daniel J. Kontak and P.H. Reynolds. Halifax : Dept. of Natural Resources, 1994. 11 p. : ill., Bibl. In: Canadian Journal of Earth Sciences : vol. 31, 1994. MICROLOG 95-06361 (1 fiche)

Recent geological mapping in the Meguma Terrane revealed the presence of previously unrecognized high-grade gneisses and gabbroic rocks that form, along with previously recognized granitic rocks, the Liscomb Complex. This paper describes the geology of the Complex and analytical results of rock specimens which cover the complete compositional spectrum present. The paper also discusses the geochronological results and the inferred thermal history, as well as the implications of the thermal history results for regional tectonics within the Meguma Terrane. Abuse and neglect of older adults in institutional settings : a discussion paper building from English language resources

By Charmaine Spencer. Ottawa : Health Canada, Health Programs & Services Branch, Health Services Directorate, Mental Health Division, 1995. 101 p. : Bibl. French ed. (Les Mauvais traitements et la négligence...) : 95-06550/2. ISBN 0-662-23096-5 CCG-P no. H72-21/133-2-1995E MICROLOG 95-06351 (2 fiche)

This discussion paper provides a general overview of concepts and issues concerning abuse and neglect of older adults in institutional settings. It begins with a description of abuse and neglect in institutions, outlining terminology and describing guiding principles for positive relationships within institutions. This is followed by a general description of a caring environment, noting similarities and differences between abuse and neglect in community and institutional settings. The third chapter explores the current knowledge base on abuse and neglect in institutional settings. Chapter four describes characteristics of institutional life which may lead to abuse and neglect and those characteristics of older adults in institutions that may leave them vulnerable. The final chapter describes procedures for identifying, reporting, investigating and documenting abuse and neglect; the timing and manner of interventions; and strategies for preventing abuse and neglect. This report describes the conduct of a project to compile data on alcohol use by persons fatally injured in motor vehicle accidents occurring on or off public highways in Canada. Data are obtained from police-reported information on the characteristics of the victim and details of the fatal motor accident; and coroners' and medical examiners' files for objective, toxicological data from body fluid samples. The focus of the report is on alcohol in fatally injured drivers with a secondary focus on alcohol in fatally injured pedestrians. The report contains general descriptive information on the frequency and quantity of alcohol found in drivers and pedestrians fatally injured in motor vehicle collisions and trends in alcohol detected among fatally injured operators of automobiles, motorcycles, trucks, vans, and tractor-trailers and among fatally injured pedestrians. Data on alcohol use by drivers are presented separately for each province and territory. An historical overview of the Fatality Database Project and a description of the project design are provided in an appendix. Statistics are provided in tabular and graphical formats.

This paper reports on the anisotropy of tracer (zirconium 95) self-diffusion in both nominally pure and high-purity (iron-free) alpha zirconium crystals. The investigators measured self-diffusion coefficients on single-crystal rod specimens in the range 867-1110 K in directions either parallel or perpendicular to the c-axis of the crystal. The results compare the coefficients measured in the two types of crystals, the calculated anisotropy ratio values, the dependency of those values on temperature, and the diffusion profiles in terms of the thin-film solution to the diffusion equation.

This report sets criteria for ammonia to protect aquatic life in marine or saltwater ecosystems. The criteria to protect marine life are set for either continuous exposure to ammonia or for maximum acceptable concentrations. A major use of the criteria is to set ambient water quality objectives. The objectives are the criteria modified or adopted to protect the most sensitive water use in a particular body of water. They are used in the preparation of waste management permits, which are the only entity to have legal standing. However, they are not usually part of the permit. This report provides background information and the recommended criteria.

Previous studies using argon-40 ion bombardment have revealed that the intermetallic compound Zr₃Fe undergoes an irradiation-induced transformation from the orthorhombic crystalline state to the amorphous state. This paper presents results of a study of 0.9 MeV electron irradiations performed at 28-220 K in a high-voltage electron microscope on orthorhombic Zr₃Fe samples. The investigators obtained a kinetic description of the amorphization in terms of dose, dose rate, and temperature by measuring the onset, spread, and final size of the amorphous region. The results reported include the effect of temperature on the dose-to-amorphization ratio and the rate of growth of the amorphous region, and the effect of a critical dose rate and temperature on the size of the amorphous region.

Cette étude propose une méthode et des outils formalisés permettant d'analyser de façon cohérente et systématique l'attrait financier d'une production de biomasse intégrée à celle des produits forestiers traditionnels. L'approche générale suggérée a été appliquée aux peuplements mixtes et feuillus de l'aire commune 1202 de la forêt publique québécoise du Bas-Saint-Laurent. L'étude a été abordée selon la démarche du système modulaire d'aménagement forestier ECO-4 modifié à fond pour qu'il puisse accepter les équations de prédiction de biomasse forestière. Les résultats provenant des simulations suggèrent que dans le cas de l'Unité d'aménagement 12, grâce à la présence d'un marché pour les bois francs combinée à une distance de transport raisonnable et à une traficabilité aisée, l'intégration de la récupération de biomasse à la récolte de produits forestiers traditionnels peut s'avérer des plus intéressantes.

This study proposes a method and some computer tools to carry out a coherent, systematic analysis of the financial attractiveness of integrating the production of forest biomass for energy with the production of traditional forest products. The authors applied the proposed general approach to hardwood and mixed stands in Common Area 1202 of the publicly-owned Quebec forest in the lower St Lawrence Valley. The study follows the steps of the ECO-4 modular forest management software that was completely revised to accept equations predicting forest biomass. This report presents the results of the computer simulations, indicating the feasibility of integrating biomass recovery into the harvesting of traditional forest products, and the factors affecting that feasibility. An appendix includes a document on the weaknesses that characterize the preparation of field decisions on forest management and the remedies that appear necessary.

The CC3 (Canadian Concept, generation 3) system model describes a hypothetical system for burying nuclear fuel waste. The model includes separate submodels for the engineered barriers within the disposal vault, the geosphere in which the vault is emplaced, and the biosphere in the vicinity of any discharge zones. The system model is embedded within the SYVAC3 computer code, which takes parameter uncertainty into account by repeated simulation of the system. GEONET (Geosphere Network) is the geosphere model component of this system model. It simulates contaminant transport from the vault to the biosphere along a transport network composed of one-dimensional transport segments connected together in 3-dimensional space. This document contains a set of specifications for GEONET, consisting of a model synopsis describing all the relevant equations and assumptions used in the model, a set of formal data flow diagrams and mini-specifications, and a data dictionary.

Analysis of variance (ANOVA) is a powerful and popular technique for analyzing data. This handbook is an introduction to ANOVA for those not familiar with the subject and also serves as a reference for scientists using ANOVA to analyze their experiments. The handbook discusses the elements of experimental design and explains the concept of ANOVA using a one-way fixed factor example. The meaning of degrees of freedom, sums of squares, and mean squares are fully explored along with the basic concept of hypothesis testing. The handbook also outlines techniques for comparing several means, with recommendations on how to perform multiple comparisons. A completely randomized factorial design is used to illustrate the procedures for recognizing an experimental design, setting up the ANOVA table, and performing an ANOVA using SAS statistical software. The final chapter describes many designs commonly used in forestry trials.

Plant viruses are among the most important, complex and extensively distributed plant pathogens in the world, and aphids are the largest group of known plant-virus vectors. With the viruses they transmit, aphids are a potential threat to agricultural crops. For epidemiological studies, it is important to know all the aphids that transmit a certain virus and vice versa. This bulletin accumulates all recognized aphid-transmitted virus records from the "Conspicuous" (Kennedy et al. 1962). Standardized authoritative nomenclatures for both the aphid-transmitted viruses, their vectors and natural hosts are provided in accordance with the literature. It consists of 5 catalogues: a catalogue of all recognized aphid-transmitted viruses, listing under each the aphid vectors; a reciprocal catalogue of aphids, listing under each the viruses transmitted; a virus catalogue, listing under each the natural hosts; a reciprocal catalogue of natural hosts, listing under each the viruses infected; and a catalogue of the geographical distribution of aphid-transmitted viruses. This bulletin is a quick reference for economic, applied and agricultural entomologists and virologists at universities and research institutes.

Dans ce document de travail, on examine la possibilité et les moyens d'améliorer la Loi canadienne sur la protection de l'environnement en vue de gérer l'environnement canadien selon une approche articulée sur l'écosystème. La première partie du document donne des renseignements généraux sur les conditions et les mécanismes inhérents à l'approche de l'écosystème, et l'on y décrit les initiatives actuelles visant sa mise en oeuvre. Dans la deuxième, on discute des parties de la LCPE qui concernent l'approche de l'écosystème. Enfin, la troisième partie détermine comment accroître l'utilisation de cette approche dans le cadre de la LCPE.

The British Columbia Water Quality Branch is developing province-wide water quality criteria for use in assessing water quality data and preparing site-specific water quality objectives. These criteria are being developed substance by substance, beginning with those most urgently needed for water quality assessments and objectives. The tables comprising this report contain both working criteria awaiting approval and criteria approved by BC Environment. Substances covered by the criteria include particulates, nutrients, cyanide, nitrogen, metals, bacteria, chlorine, fluoride, ammonia in saltwater, and organic compounds such as chlorophenols and polychlorinated biphenyls.

Assessing progress towards sustainability in the Fraser Basin : Board report card

Fraser Basin Management Board (Canada). Vancouver, BC : The Board, 1995. 27 p. On cover: Fraser Basin Management Program. MICROLOG 95-06761 (1 fiche)

Schools have been using report cards for decades to track students' progress. The Fraser Basin Management Board is adopting this useful tool to evaluate progress towards sustainability in the Fraser Basin. This report card assigns a grade to certain issues, focusing on and summarizing the degree of progress being made on critical sustainability issues. Each summary includes a definition of the issue, an outline of responses to the issue, highlights of the good and bad news and recommendations for next steps. Most summaries include a letter grade (A, B, C, D or F) which indicates the degree of progress being made towards sustainability. Grades are based on government and non-government programs and the response of individuals throughout the Basin to achieve sustainability. Issues include population growth, water resources, salmon fisheries, forest resources, the economy, aboriginal/non-aboriginal relations, planning processes, and decision-making.

The BEAM computer code helps to assess the mechanical integrity of a nuclear fuel bundle. This report describes the features and the validation of the code. The focus of the code is to provide a fast and simple tool for calculating the following parameters of a fuel element and the adjacent endplate: fuel element stiffness, spring constants of the endplate, stresses in the endplate and in the endplate/endcap weld, frequency of lateral vibrations, collapse pressure, and buckling load. The code is based largely on analytical closed-form equations, with a small element of the code containing numerical integrations. The report presents results of calculations using the code and comparison of those results with rigidities and frequencies measured in reactor tests. Also included are examples of application of the code to investigate endplate cracking and endplate integrity.

The process of gluing wood is an important value-added process that is found in nearly every product made in secondary wood processing plants. This report reviews two perspectives of glued wood products: plant operations, including the various technologies and processes used in manufacturing glued-wood products, and product standards. The report describes visits made to secondary wood processing plants in Denmark and Sweden, including details of the wood gluing machinery and procedures used, and visits made to wood products research and standards institutes in Scandinavia, Netherlands, and Germany. The report also discusses how the approaches to glued-wood product manufacturing and product standards observed in those visits could be applied in the British Columbia secondary wood processing industry.

The Vancouver Trade and Convention Centre has been an important element in Vancouver's tourism infrastructure since 1987. The Centre's management believes there is an opportunity to expand the facility to attract more and larger events. This report analyzes the convention marketplace to determine appropriate expansion parameters. In particular, it quantifies market size, determines appropriate target markets, and suggests a facility mix suitable to meet market needs. The report also assesses the competition for convention business from other cities and the suitability of Vancouver as a convention destination. The secondary data presented in this report have been validated, updated, and expanded through a series of discussions with representatives having knowledge of the convention facility market both in Vancouver and internationally.

Grâce à un tel réseau, on pourrait mesurer les conditions et les tendances de façon exhaustive tout en procédant à des recherches détaillées. Pour réussir, il faudra créer de vastes partenariats possédant l'expertise et les ressources nécessaires et dotés du mandat voulu. Il faudra aussi un engagement à long terme, car beaucoup de processus écologiques se déroulent sur quelques décennies ou même plus longtemps.

Precision seeding is an alternative method to aerial seeding for regenerating forests and has such advantages as less seed required per hectare, ability to control seedling density, and enabling simultaneous site preparation and seeding. Limited experience with mechanical direct seeding in northwestern Ontario prompted a June 1989 operational trial using the Bartt precision seeder on a site in the Wabigoon Forest near Ignace. This report summarizes the results of the trial after its fifth year. The objective of the trial was to determine whether the Bartt seeder could increase jack pine stocking when compared to a control no-seeding treatment. The results also include a comparison between the relative stocking and density of pine seedlings at the precision-seeded site and at an adjacent, aerially seeded jack pine stand of the same age.

Bayesian probabilistic reasoning in design

This paper develops a method which allows the search for design parameters to be guided by prior experience, leading to a tool which can be used for computer-aided design. The method is based on the use of Bayesian probabilistic reasoning, and the paper suggests that the decisions involved in the design process can be represented as nodes in a Bayesian network. The conditional probability that a child node in this network will take a desired value, given the values of its parents, can be estimated from a database built up from simulations of past designs. Bayesian probabilistic reasoning can then be used to calculate the probability of particular choices leading to a successful design, enabling the most promising alternatives to be examined first.

The Cluxewe Conservation Area was formed to protect a portion of an ecologically important salt-marsh habitat adjacent to the Cluxewe River estuary. Preliminary inventories indicated that the estuary supported many species of migratory and resident birds as well as a diverse marsh flora. In 1990, a more thorough inventory was done to determine bird use of the estuary. Birds found included gulls, shorebirds, passerines and waterfowl. Presents methods and limitations, habitat use, seasonal numbers and a composition of the birds. Includes bird use and recreational activities, and future studies.¹

Estuaries along coastal British Columbia are important to a diverse wildlife fauna, particularly resident and migratory birds. To assist in the management of these estuaries, an inventory of birds was taken to determine bird use from September 1990 through to October 1991. A total of 92 species of birds were found, including loons, grebs, cormorants, herons, swans, geese, dabbling and diving ducks, raptors, grouse, rails, cranes, shorebirds, gulls, alcids, doves, swifts, hummingbirds, kingfishers, woodpeckers, and various passerines. Seasonal numbers and habitat use are presented, along with the methods and limitations.

This paper outlines issues, suggestions, and service priorities relating to benefits, programs, and services which support older Albertans. The paper is organized around seven major areas of concern relating to income security, health and social services, living arrangements, transportation, recreation and leisure, elder abuse, and labor policies identified in the literature on aging. The programs represented include seniors' centers, home support programs, information and referral services, and professional social work services. The paper is intended to reflect the primary areas of concern identified in interviews with executive staff and board members from ten programs located in the Calgary area.

The South Vancouver Island Justice Education Project (SVIJE) was a pilot project committed to improving the delivery of justice services to First Nation citizens. It began in March, 1991 and ended February, 1993. During its brief operational period, questions arose about the effect of the Project on crime victims, and about the amount and type of involvement of member Bands in this tribal council initiative. This review describes the range of activities undertaken by the SVIJE. It also provides information regarding the outcomes of these activities and discusses the conditions which may be required to sustain alternative justice arrangements in South Island Coast Salish communities. These issues are addressed in depth, beginning with a brief outline of the circumstances of the Project's initiation. Sources of information and a description of Review participants are included. Also provides an opportunity for Review participants to approve the manner in which their input has been presented.

This paper proposes a new, easily testable programmable logic array (PLA) design which takes into account both single and multiple faults. The design process uses a simple property of relatively prime numbers. In the proposed implementation, the test pattern generation and response compaction are performed by a circular self-test path, which allows large embedded PLAs to be self-tested simultaneously with other combinational blocks in a very large scale integrated circuit. The paper discusses the fault detection effectiveness of the proposed solution if the test patterns are generated randomly. The paper also shows practical modifications to the design, taking layout constraints and efficiency into account, and shows how to use circular self-test path techniques for generating test patterns and collecting test responses. A sample implementation and its silicon area overhead is included.

Bulkley Valley air quality management plan : inhalable particulate

By Doug Johnson. Victoria : BC Environment, 1995. v, 38 p. : Bibl. (Air quality management plan / BC Environment ; 95-01)
MICROLOG 95-06741 (1 fiche)

The goal of BC Environment is to eliminate air quality impacts by means of regulation of various emission sources and public participation in responsible wood-burning practices. Most of the particulate matter in the Bulkley Valley comes from wood burning: from beehive burners, wood burning stoves, and open burning of land clearing debris. This document is an update of and supersedes the 1992 Smithers Air Quality Management Plan incorporating changes in impact criteria associated with inhalable particulate, legislative initiatives and integrating the expanded monitoring program in the Valley. In this document, air pollution potential is assessed for the Bulkley Valley. This is followed by a presentation of the environmental impacts of particulate matter and the BC Environment Air quality monitoring programme. Next the management strategies are defined, environmental impact criteria and objectives are presented, and air quality assessment criteria also defined. A glossary is appended at the end of the document.

The Calakmul Model Forest is located in the Yucatán Peninsula, adjacent to a biosphere reserve. The region is tropical, covered with medium and low forest having great biodiversity and a variety of soil types. Poor natural resource management methods used by settlers and alteration of part of the original forested area by traditional agricultural systems have given rise to a complex variety of ecosystems and a number of problems related to forestry, ecology, and society. The Model Forest project described in this report is intended to lead to land use diversification, forest conservation, ecological management of the forest, increased awareness of the importance of the forest among local residents, and preservation of archaeological sites. The report also describes the forest's biogeographical characteristics, the local economy, the current resource management situation, and activities to be undertaken by the project.

This document compiles the work of a group of consultants who undertook a biophysical assessment of the living and non-living resources within the Calgary river valley system as the first phase in developing an urban park master plan for those valleys. The assessment included three stages: data collection, data analysis, and evaluation of development options. The researchers first divided the area into preliminary ecological units, then proceeded with a systematic field assessment of landforms, soils, vegetation, and wildlife. Quantification, classification, and analysis of the data enabled precise mapping of ecological units within the river valley system. These units were ranked on the basis of their ability to provide food and cover for wildlife and to accommodate recreational development. The assessment also recognized 29 distinctive plant communities.

The Challenge to Canadian forest products in Europe : managing a complex environmental issue

By W.T. Stanbury, Bill Wilson and Ian B. Vertinsky. Victoria : Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II, 1995. ii, 98 p. : Bibl. (Working paper / Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II ; WP-OI-95.04) MICROLOG 95-06136 (2 fiche)

There has been a recent increase in global awareness of forest management issues such as clear-cutting, preservation of old-growth timber, the loss of biodiversity, and logging practices that adversely affect the environment. In British Columbia, local environmental groups lead in calling international (mainly European) attention to such issues, and Canada is vulnerable to international pressures from those groups. This study examines how forestry issues have become internationalized by a number of environmental interest groups and how forest companies and governments have responded, examines the role that environmental groups should play in a pluralist democracy, identifies ways to enhance the contributions such groups make in the policy formulation process while reducing conflicts between environmental and economic interests, and explores pathologies occurring in the interrelationships among environmental groups, industry, and governments.

This conference provided the first opportunity for the circumpolar countries to discuss food and agriculture challenges facing northern regions. The conference was a formal step towards northern agricultural development through the exchange of research, policy, and production knowledge from eight circumpolar countries. This document contains the papers presented at the conference, including research results by scientists, discussions of activities by producers, and commentaries about government policies and programs. Topics of the papers included production of animals such as reindeer, muskoxen, and sheep; production of plants and crops such as legumes and cereals; horticultural production; soils and agroecology; agricultural research and development projects; and northern agricultural policy.

The topic of airborne fine particulates has jumped from obscurity to the most pressing air quality issue in British Columbia. Because of this, the Ministry of Environment, Lands and Parks undertook REVEAL (Regional Visibility Experimental Assessment in the Lower Fraser Valley). This program collects detailed visibility and fine particulate data. One objective is to identify and quantify the sources of fine particulates which contribute to the ambient loadings (source attribution). There are many techniques and one of the more powerful receptor modelling techniques is called Chemical Mass Balance (CMB). This report provides information on CMB source apportionment during REVEAL. Includes methods, results and discussions, recommendations for future work, a summary, and conclusions.

They discuss the theoretical complexity as well as the practical efficiency of an existing generic algorithm. They also investigate the 'all shortest hyperpaths' problem and contrast it with the 'all shortest paths' problem in graphs. The report discusses issues related to the experimental design and presents extensive computational results.

Conflict-free access to subsets of array elements is essential for effective utilization of parallel memories. This paper develops skewing schemes for array storage that provide conflict-free access to all entries in r-by-s and s-by-r subarrays, using a strong connection between conflict-free skewing schemes and latin squares. The paper also develops a skewing scheme for accessing all entries within rectilinear distance of a fixed entry. These schemes all have simple algorithms for address generation.

This document outlines a strategy for a multimedia learning network in Saskatchewan that encompasses a range of learning media, including print, audio, video, data, and live televised broadcasts. The network will eventually link all learners to Internet, SchoolNet, the provincial electronic library system, the province's two universities, the Saskatchewan Institute of Applied Science and Technology, and the Saskatchewan Government Correspondence School. The document outlines the potential benefits of multimedia learning, the goals of the multimedia learning strategy, three key initiatives to be used initially to advance those goals, and the connections with various stakeholders in implementing the strategy. The initiatives include a Telecommunications Enhancement Fund, and a Program Development and Support Fund.

The British Columbia Ministry of Employment and Investment undertook a consultation process to examine the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of public sector construction, with the goal of identifying ways in which the government could maximize the value for money it receives from its expenditures on public capital. The consultations included interviews with over 200 representatives from about 50 stakeholder groups involved in public sector construction. This report summarizes the comments made by the interviewees, highlights their main concerns and suggestions for improvements, and synthesizes common themes that emerged. The issues considered in the report include the importance of public sector construction, government coordination, government management and accountability, cost control, consultant issues, documentation and tendering, contract award and contractor-related issues, job-site relations, local hire and purchase, training and equity, and regulatory issues.

This report describes studies of the conversion of tritium to tritiated water on metal surfaces under conditions relevant to releases into a fusion reactor hall. The metals used in the experiments were those that might be found in reactor containments. Study temperatures ranged from 373 K to 623 K. In the experiments, atmospheres with tritium levels of 0.03 to 1 curie per cubic meter were passed over metal samples, most of which had as-received machined or sanded surfaces. Parameters examined included the rate constant of oxidation per unit geometric surface area, the influence of surface roughness and oxides on the reaction rate, dependence of reaction rate on hydrogen or hydrogen isotope concentration, and the effects of coatings and of metal composition on reaction rate. The report also discusses a simple accident scenario and the possible retention of tritium on containment walls.

Coping with capital surges : the return of finance to Latin America

Private capital flows to Latin America have increased dramatically since 1989. This book examines the possible causes and consequences of this new and unforeseen wave of investment from the perspectives of both the borrower and the lender. The authors first analyze direct investment, securities investment (both bonds and shares), and bank lending by investors in the United States, Europe, and Japan, as well as the regulations affecting those investors. They differentiate among the scale, features, and motivations of those investors and lenders. The authors then turn to the features of capital flows, their macroeconomic impact, and policy responses in three recipient countries: Argentina, Chile, and Mexico. Those policy responses fundamentally relate to attempts to moderate the impact of capital inflows on exchange rates, to reduce the monetary impact of foreign exchange operations, and to moderate short-term capital inflows.

According to some recently published results, counter-based compaction of test responses produced by a circuit under test outperforms compaction by linear feedback shift registers. However, these results are based on simplified assumptions. This paper first discusses what error model should be used to describe the behavior of a faulty circuit under test. Using the selected model, the paper examines the three most popular counter-based compaction schemes: one's counting, transition counting, and edge counting. It then uses Markov processes to derive equations for iterative computations of exact aliasing probability for any test session length and determines the asymptotic probability of aliasing. For one's counting, the paper also presents a closed-form expression that gives the exact aliasing probability for any test session length. Finally, the paper presents examples that compare the aliasing by counter-based compaction with that by linear feedback shift registers.

La réaction des arbres à trois espacements différents a été comparée à celle d'arbres témoins de placettes de 0,08 ha, selon un plan expérimental en carré latin de 4 x 4. Les rejets de souche ont été évalués après 5 ans, tandis que l'accroissement et le degré de ramification des arbres d'avenir ont été mesuré après la cinquième et la dixième saison de croissance. Les résultats sont présentés en forme statistique. Une analyse et conclusion et aussi présenté.

This paper presents an analytical method for the optimization of the design of mechanically fastened joints in composite structures. The method can deal with multiple-hole laminates and consists of three parts: stress analysis, prediction of joint strength and failure mode, and optimization of joint design. A complex variational method determines the stress distribution at the fastener holes, and the fasteners are modelled as short elastic beams. An iterative scheme incorporates joint flexibility to improve the accuracy of the determination of load transfer by fasteners. Point stress and quadratic tensor polynomial failure criteria predict the joint strength and failure mode. Optimum joint design is generated by a multivariate constrained optimization scheme. The method has been incorporated into a personal-computer program which does not require mesh generation. Sample results are included.

Developing diversity : a resource manual for the British Columbia fire service

Victoria : Ministry of Municipal Affairs, Office of the Fire Commissioner, 1995. 79 p.

ISBN 0-7726-2541-7

MICROLOG 95-06655 (1 fiche)

The population from which the British Columbia fire services select their personnel is becoming increasingly diverse. To attract and retain the best possible candidates, and to help enhance community support, it is essential to recruit from all groups represented in the population. This manual is designed to help each fire department reflect the diversity of its community, and provides guidelines for broadening the recruitment and hiring base. The first part of the manual explains employment equity and how it can help a fire department develop diversity. It also discusses benefits and legal issues, and presents strategies for managing and maintaining diversity. The second part includes the tools for developing and implementing an employment equity program, discussing what to consider when designing a program and presenting aspects of an employment systems review.

Development of a non-intrusive test for argon gas levels for high performance windows

There is a need for a method for testing the gas in gas-filled insulated glass units that is inexpensive, reliable, convenient, and non-intrusive. A method having the potential to fulfill those characteristics has been developed for measuring the argon content of gas in insulated glass units. The method is based on the electrical breakdown potential of the air-argon mixture in the unit. This report outlines refinements to that procedure which were required to minimize the potential degradation of the glass and its coatings. These refinements include development of electronic circuitry that senses the onset of an electric discharge and quickly removes the applied high voltage from the glass. In addition, the power supply control was made more responsive. The report also presents results of tests using a prototype test instrument, including its precision and the degree of damage to glass and coatings caused by its use.

Experience has shown that under extreme cold weather conditions and high interior humidity levels, bottom edge-of-glass condensation can still occur in double-glazed high-performance window units. This condensation is primarily caused by convective flow of the gas within the double glazing. This report presents results of investigations conducted to develop effective flow-barriers to prevent the descending cavity gas from reaching the bottom region of the interior glazing sheet, where the gas then cools the bottom edge-of-glass region. The researchers developed and evaluated alternative convective flow barrier designs involving integration of a flow barrier with the insulating edge seal. They also developed a more satisfactory method for testing condensation resistance than conventional thermographic techniques. The report includes results of testing narrow-width triple-glazed units developed to solve the condensation problem.

British Columbia is divided into eight development regions which work toward the identification and resolution of regional needs and priorities, and allow greater participation by the public in regional activities. This report reviews past and present activities of these regions. It outlines the strategic priorities and service objectives of the regions, each under the responsibility of the Ministry of Regional and Economic Development, and summarizes the committee and task force work conducted. The report then lists regional projects and initiatives by sector, giving the project title, region, project description, clients targeted, status, and other ministries involved. Appendices include lists of regional committee and task force members and a directory of key contacts among regional development staff.

The Effects of tailwinds and control cross coupling on rotorcraft handling qualities for steep, decelerating instrument approaches and missed approaches

A significant improvement in the utility of rotorcraft can be realized by allowing, in instrument meteorological conditions, steep and decelerating approaches which conclude at low decision heights and at speeds much lower than presently allowed. This type of procedure permits the use of small, confined heliports located in obstacle-rich environments in weather conditions much poorer than currently allowed. This paper describes research conducted to document the effect of conducting steep, decelerating approaches in the presence of tail winds, to investigate the handling qualities factors of terminating the approach, to document the height loss at the initiation of a missed approach procedure, and to investigate the handling qualities degradation induced by inter-axis control cross coupling. The results reported were obtained in experiments using a modified Bell 205A-1 helicopter and provide a database on which rotorcraft instrument flight certification standards can be formulated.

This paper first considers the problem of finding a maximum flow between a source vertex and a sink vertex in a capacitated network with a set of vertices and edges. The authors present a time algorithm that computes a maximum flow between two vertices, which are determined upon its completion. As an application of this algorithm, the paper considers the problem of constructing a cactus representation for all minimum cuts in a network. The previously known algorithms that construct such a representation for a capacitated network are based on the fact that the set of all minimum cuts can be divided into disjoint subsets, each of which can be obtained by solving a maximum flow problem, where both the source and sink are specified. This paper proposes a generalized algorithm in which the source and sink in each maximum flow problem can be chosen arbitrarily.

The paper first provides a qualitative background on the factors affecting the stresses in the sheath near the endcap, including results from photoelastic measurements. The paper then describes parametric analytical studies which quantify the influences of major parameters such as loads, material properties, boundary conditions, and dimensions and shape of the cap and sheath. From the results of the parametric studies, the investigators identify practical design features that reduce the sheath stresses and make recommendations for incorporating these features into the design of high-burnup fuels.

Empirical evidence on the cost of adjustment and dynamic labour demand

By Robert A. Amano. Ottawa : Bank of Canada, 1995. 29 p. : Bibl. (Working paper / Bank of Canada ; 95-3 ISSN 1192-5434) ISBN 0-662-23484-7
MICROLOG 95-06381 (1 fiche)

Sluggish adjustment of labor demand resulting from significant adjustment costs may be one factor that could help explain some of the persistence of unemployment in Canada. This paper examines whether there is significant evidence of the effect of adjustment costs on Canadian labor demand. The author uses a linear quadratic model and attempts to estimate the relative adjustment costs of labor demand as well as its rate of adjustment towards long-run equilibrium. The author estimates the structural parameters using the Euler equation and employs a limited-information approach that does not require an explicit solution for the model's control variables in terms of the forcing processes. The results presented include the relative importance of adjustment costs versus disequilibrium costs and the length of time for 90% of labor demand to be completed.

Encouraging the commercial utilization of wood residue from the construction of the new Vancouver Island Highway

The utilization of wood residue from woods operations, forest products mills and from log processing yards has progressed with varying levels of intensity for many years. The extent of utilization has fluctuated because the low quality of the material only provides for marginal viability for secondary operational activities. This report examines the Vancouver Island right-of-way wood residue for area, volume, tree species and accessibility for each of the inland route, and the Nanaimo Parkway. Next, it assesses markets, demand, supply & price of marketable wood residue specifically looking at composting, pulp chip furnish, hog fuel (pulpmill usage, or bark, mulch & fines), fibreboard plant usage or other usage. Further sections identify companies interested in bidding on wood residue activities, potential economic development and benefits and conclusions and recommendations. Appendices provide terms of reference and photographs.

Le Bureau d'enregistrement des enfants disparus a pour objectif d'aider les services de police, tant à l'échelle nationale qu'internationale par l'intermédiaire d'Interpol, à retrouver rapidement et sûrement les enfants séparés de leur famille. Le rapport sur les enfants disparus décrit l'ampleur du problème au pays. Les statistiques figurant dans ce rapport proviennent du Centre d'information de la police canadienne. Le rapport donne une vue d'ensemble, et ensuite traite de l'enlèvement par un étranger ou par un parent, des fugues, des enfants en danger, ainsi que des tendances. On analyse des statistiques selon plusieurs critères tels le sexe ou la province.

These guidelines are primarily directed at design teams engaged in new facilities for universities, colleges and institutes in B.C. They both reflect and communicate an expectation that all new building projects and major renovations will be designed to high environmental standards. This publication introduces the guidelines with objectives and scope, and then emphasizes the changing context in BC educational facilities which will affect the choice of environmental strategies in new building design. It covers energy efficiency, emphasizing the importance of energy in sustainable building strategies and identifies architectural and engineering design strategies to reduce building operating energy use (siting, building massing and orientation, wall/roof and window design, thermal mass/thermal storage, mechanical systems, hot water system, daylighting, electric lighting). Resource conservation presents strategies for land, materials and water resource conservation as well as strategies for reducing construction and human wastes. Next, occupant health and well-being presents strategies to create healthy indoor environments covering thermal quality, indoor air quality, lighting and acoustic quality, followed by a section dealing with inter-relationships and conflicts between environmental issues and design strategies.

Ce rapport présente les résultats de l'examen de la réglementation d'Environnement Canada. Par suite du budget fédéral de février 1992, le gouvernement a, en effet, entrepris d'examiner tous ses règlements. Deux raisons avaient motivé cet examen : premièrement, certains craignaient que les règlements ne nuisent à la compétitivité du Canada en imposant des frais inutiles aux entreprises et aux consommateurs; deuxièmement, plusieurs jugeaient que les contribuables ne pouvaient plus se permettre d'entretenir bon nombre des règlements actuellement en vigueur. Cet examen a porté sur 38 règlements dans deux de ses principaux secteurs de programme : la protection de l'environnement et la conservation de la faune.

The aging of Canada's population has brought forth many ethical questions of direct concern to legislators, service providers, administrators, and individual seniors and their families. This document contains papers intended to improve awareness and stimulate discussion of these questions. In the introductory paper, the authors outline the nature and scope of ethics, discuss the heterogeneous nature of the senior population, and provide some guidelines for determining courses of action. The next paper describes decision processes in competent and incompetent individuals and considers the right of self-determination, notably with regard to medical treatment and euthanasia. This is complemented by the following papers on the ethical principles guiding health care professionals in the care of older patients and on the allocation of health care in an aging society. The final paper is on the ethics of research involving seniors, weighing its social benefits against potential harms.

In 1990, Barbara McDougall, then Minister of Employment and Immigration Canada, announced the Stay-In School Initiative. This program focused on reducing pupil dropouts, and proposed spending $166.3 million across Canada on a new project over a four-year period. This new project was named the START Program. By the end of December 1991, 11 separate projects, involving 9 jurisdictions and 24 schools, had been selected to receive funding. By the end of the 1992-93 school year financial support had been withdrawn from two of the projects. 1993-94 started with 9 projects, involving 7 jurisdictions and 14 schools. A report on these schools was submitted in August 1994. It was based on information gathered from visits, telephone contacts, and on progress reports forwarded by the project directors. This report provides an overall view of the START Program as of June 30, 1994. It summarizes and combines information given in the year-end report for 1993-94 and gives results of the Culture Free Self Esteem Inventory not shown in the major report.

At 10 placer deposits throughout the Yukon, the investigators conducted profile surveys near known depths to bedrock, measured overburden GPR velocities with common midpoint velocity surveys, and measured overburden resistivity with horizontal loop electromagnetic resistivity soundings. The report provides background information on placer deposit geology, placer exploration techniques, and GPR theory, describes the survey and data processing procedures, and presents the field test results for placer deposits of the Klondike, Mayo, and Nansen types. The report concludes with recommendations for using GPR in placer exploration. The appendices contain the detailed test site results.

Accurate sampling of placer gravels is very difficult due to the inclusion or loss of a single particle of gold (the nugget effect). Drills may be used for sampling, but there is little impartial and accurate information on the selection of drills for such a purpose. This report presents the results of tests conducted under typical Yukon field conditions using radioactive gold tracers. The investigators placed frozen cylindrical cores of compacted gravels containing four sizes of radiotracers in 35 drill holes and redrilled the holes with two types of reverse circulation drills and three solid auger drills. The results reported include the degree of recovery of the four sizes of gold particles studied. The report also reviews radiotracer testing technology, the characteristics of Yukon gold placers, methods of placer deposit evaluation, and characteristics of seven types of drills. Recommendations for using drills for sampling are included.

Accurate sampling of placer gravels is extremely difficult due to the inclusion or loss of a single particle of gold (the nugget effect), and errors are compounded by the small size of samples. Drills may be used for sampling, but there is little impartial and accurate information to guide selection of modern drills, which are often chosen for their penetration rate or cost rather than for their sampling accuracy. This report presents results of field tests evaluating three types of drills under typical Yukon placer conditions for their ability to recover radioactive tracer gold samples. The investigators placed frozen cylindrical cores of compacted gravels containing four sizes of radiotracers in 44 drill holes and the holes were redrilled. The report details the results for normal circulation drills, reverse circulation drills, and solid auger drills. The report also includes recommendations for use of the drills for placer sampling.

The START Project was a Stay-In-School initiative funded by Employment and Immigration Canada from March 1991 to March 1995. In the first year of the START Project Alberta Education was invited to participate in the selection of school-based projects. Eleven projects were selected and it was agreed to evaluate them during the three years they received funding. The purposes of the evaluation were to identify the indicators most commonly used in selecting potential dropouts; to track attendance and dropout rates for START project students; to monitor the achievement and attitudes of the students; and to compare the relative success of various dropout prevention strategies. A summary of the findings of the evaluation are presented in this document.

This report reviews the evolution of Canadian research reactor design over the past fifty years, from the early experiments on subcritical nuclear reactions to the latest high-power nuclear research facilities. Highlights include the ZEEP (Zero Energy Experimental Pile) low-power critical facility, the first reactor to operate outside of the United States; the SLOWPOKE (Safe LOW Power Kritical Experiment) research reactor, the McMaster medium-power facility, the NRX (National Reactor Experimental) and NRU (National Research Universal) high-power reactors, and the MAPLE-X10 reactor concept which is being developed to meet requirements for multipurpose neutron sources. The report also analyzes evolutionary trends in Canadian research reactors, noting a focus on neutron efficiency and a preference for natural uranium fuel and heavy water moderators.

This study had the objectives of identifying purchasers of thin sawn boards and/or sliced veneer, determining product competitors and approximate market volumes, and producing a report that would form the basis for a manufacturing feasibility study. The market search conducted for the study surveyed wood product manufacturers in western Canada, California, the Pacific Northwest, and Japan with the goal of identifying those interested in entering into medium- to long-term sales agreements with a manufacturer based in British Columbia. This document outlines the results of the survey and includes statistics on Canadian veneer imports and exports, Japanese production of laminated lumber, and veneer production costs and prices. The appendix contains directories of Japanese manufacturers of laminated posts and of Canadian and U.S. companies interviewed in the survey.

Extensive blockage of broached support plates in steam generators has occurred at various nuclear power stations, and it is suspected that flow patterns play a role in the observed fouling. This paper describes work directed at understanding how flow patterns caused by the pressure tube support geometry may influence fouling. The paper includes results of preliminary tests with mockups containing the tube supports, in which flow patterns were visualized using injected air bubbles. The investigators measured local velocities and turbulence levels using a laser technique and measured axial pressure profiles to determine overall resistance coefficients and to identify local pressure extremes. The paper proposes several deposition mechanisms based on results to date.

Mixed-initiative computer-aided design requires that the designer and the design system alternately take responsibility for elaborating a solution to a given set of requirements. For this to be possible, the system must be able to explain its actions to the user. This paper considers the problem of explaining the system's calculations. It discusses the requirements for a useful explanation facility, with examples from architectural and engineering design. The paper then describes a design system based on a constraint logic programming language, showing whether the constraint network and truth maintenance system embedded in the language naturally support explanations of the kind required. The investigators conducted the study at the North York Hydro building, which is equipped with several innovative design features and is intended to function as a demonstration center for energy conserving technologies. In the study, the energy use on a floor with perimeter lights dimmed automatically was compared over 29 days of measurement with the energy use on a floor with identical lighting layout but without automatic perimeter dimming. This report presents the results of the study, including measured energy consumption profiles on the two floors, and evaluation of the economic benefits of installing automatic light dimming in new and existing office buildings. This paper presents the results of a project that compares fine (under 53 micron) sediment geochemistry with traditional (180 micron) sediment geochemistry as a technique for reconnaissance exploration for gold. The goal of the project was to confirm or deny the key theoretical advantages of fine-fraction sediment sampling and to develop practical and efficient techniques for collecting and processing the samples. Those advantages are less local sample site variation, improved reproducibility, and the potential to preferentially define anomalies associated with significant bedrock mineralization. The five study areas used in the project were located in the Yukon, four of which were known to contain gold mineralization. Appendices include detailed gold and multi-element data and reports from the sample sites studied.

The report describes the energy monitoring program used at the houses, the data acquisition methods, and the energy performance analysis. The results presented include the predicted and average actual energy consumption for the houses and for individual energy-consuming components of the houses. The report concludes with discussion of prediction errors related to total and peak energy requirements, weather conditions, appliance energy consumption, air leakage, flue flows, and the modelling of heat recovery ventilator operation. The appendix includes detailed results of analyses for the individual houses.

The investigators studied the interference flow field associated with an asymmetrical strut-mounted aircraft model in a low-speed wind tunnel in order to shed light on the unsteady interference phenomena expected to prevail in oscillatory tests. They studied the flow field visually and through floor pressure measurements, at conditions under which direct support interference and coupled support/wall interference could occur. This paper describes the study and presents its results, including flow visualization results under zero sideslip, non-zero sideslip, and oscillatory motion; the significance of static support interference, wall interference, and unsteady coupled wall/support interference; and the effects of angle of attack and roll-orientation/sideslip angle. The study findings are applicable to test installations involving similarly sized models in closed, low-speed wind tunnels.

This report describes a study conducted to examine the feasibility of manufacturing bricks using Alberta fly ash, which is abundantly available as a waste product of coal-fired power plants. As bricks made only from fly ash have the disadvantages of high porosity, excessive chipping, and high degree of shrinkage on firing, the investigators studied the use of recycled ground glass as an inert stabilizing material that would also act as a flux, lower the firing point, and enhance strength of the brick. The report includes results from standard engineering tests performed on fired fly-ash/glass bricks, assessment of the bricks' suitability and acceptability for house construction, and an economic evaluation of the feasibility of manufacturing fly-ash/glass bricks in Alberta.

This paper presents results of determinations of polychlorinated dibenzodioxin (PCDD) and polychlorinated dibenzofuran (PCDF) levels in the prey of great blue herons foraging on the Fraser River estuary tidal flats. Observations of herons foraging at Iona and Westham Islands showed that starry flounder (Platichthys stellatus) and Pacific staghorn sculpin (Leptocottus armatus) were the major prey species throughout the year. The paper includes measurements of PCDD/PCDF levels in those two species and others such as redeye shiner (Richardsonius balteatus), peamouth chub (Mylocheilus caurinus), and shiner perch (Cymatogaster aggregata). The paper concludes with a discussion of the role of contaminated inshore fish on the entry of PCDD/PCDF into herons.

Unpaid primary caregivers provide most of the health care in British Columbia, both at home and in the community. Respite care is a service provided to care receivers in order to give those who look after them a temporary break from their caregiving responsibilities. It is one of the few services which is of direct benefit to these caregivers. This report focuses on services that benefit unpaid primary caregivers. Provides information on care receivers and caregivers, the changing face of respite, current respite services, and models for respite services. Issues in urgent need of resolution are provided. They include partnerships, access, eligibility, choice, service delivery, standards, education, training and recruitment, information, needs of rural and northern areas, and funding. Under each issue, recommendations are made. A complete list of these recommendations are also available.

This study is part of a series assessing the impacts of patenting plants and animals, and focuses on the potential impact and desirability of patenting multicellular organisms for application in forestry. The two major areas where biotechnology involving the creation of new multicellular organisms may have a significant impact on the forest products sector are the production of seeds and the employment of biopesticides. The specific objectives of the study include an evaluation of the economic effects of alternative intellectual property policy regimes on participants in the domestic forestry sector; an assessment of Canada's strategic interests in the forestry sector in the context of international competition; and an evaluation of the likely rate and direction of technological change and economic growth in the forestry sector. An investigation of mafic-ultramafic rocks and associated Ni-Cu-PGE mineralization within the Klauan Ranges, Yukon, and its lateral extensions in northern British Columbia and Alaska, was undertaken in order to better understand Triassic plutonic activity in this portion of the Cordillera, its age and tectonic setting, petrology of the intrusive rocks and relationship to the over-lying volcanics, and the economic potential. This study is the 1st attempt at investigating these bodies, both in detail and on a regional scale, documenting this information on a site by site basis, and emphasizing the economic potential of this newly recognized metallogenic terrane. This manuscript has been prepared to accommodate the needs of prospectors, explorationists and researchers as well as scientific investigators. The 1st half of the manuscript is almost exclusively dedicated to providing a thorough description and documentation of representative mafic-ultramafic complexes and affiliated sulphide occurrences in the belt with respect to location, history and physiography; structure and stratigraphy; petrology; and Ni-Cu/PGE mineralization. The 2d half is devoted to investigations pertaining to igneous silicate and oxide mineral chemistry, geochemistry of selected mafic-ultramafic intrusions, petrology and geochemistry of the temporal Nikolai volcanics, Maple Creek gabbro dyke and selected chilled margins, geochronology, radiogenic and stable-isotope investigations, tectonostratigraphic comparisons, and tectonomagmatic and metallogenic modelling.

This discussion paper examines the potential for and the means of strengthening the Canadian Environmental Protection Act given the continuing globalization of environmental protection and requisite national environmental accountability. The first section provides background information on new directions in environmental protection as a result of globalization. The second section presents areas where CEPA needs to be strengthened. The final section suggests possible adjustments to CEPA to better support and effect national environmental accountability.

In 1993, the British Columbia government directed BC Hydro to undertake an electric system operations review (ESOR) intended to evaluate whether changes to system operations could result in increased net social and environmental benefits, taking power and non-power benefits into full account. This report provides an assessment of the BC Hydro ESOR final report of 1994. It includes background information on the BC Hydro integrated electric system and the ESOR initiative as well as a review of BC Hydro's approach to the ESOR evaluation and comments on the evaluation with regard to non-power benefits, power costing, and information gaps. The report concludes with specific recommendations to government ministers with respect to implementation of operational changes, provision of information, coordination and expansion of mitigation and compensation funds, and establishment of ongoing consultation mechanisms.

Spacing in a 10-year-old sapling hardwood stand in central New Brunswick was used in 1979 to shorten the pulpwood rotation, and to adjust the species mix to meet hardwood kraft mill requirements. Three spacings were compared with an untreated control in 1/5-acre plots in a 4 x 4 Latin square design. Resprouting was assessed after 5 years of sprout growth, and growth and branchiness of crop trees after fifth and tenth growing seasons. Results are presented in a statistical form. Shelterwood cutting is the silvicultural method recommended to regenerate heavy-seeded hardwood species such as northern red oak (Quercus rubra L.). The group shelterwood cutting method, applied on a small scale, is especially attractive because of the smaller risk of failure taken during the critical stages of establishment and early growth of red oak regeneration. This report describes and illustrates a step-by-step field procedure for a three-phase group shelterwood cutting method that can be used to regenerate red oak naturally or artificially. The report also includes practical appendices on soil-site requirements of red oak, tree marking guidelines specific to the group shelterwood cutting method, regeneration of red oak in the presence of deer browsing, nursery techniques to maximize planting success, and the assessment of planting stock quality and seed tree and offspring characteristics.

This document does not provide detailed lessons in 'how to' develop and implement regional initiatives, nor does it present an exhaustive list of principles. It concentrates on the five areas, which are common to all existing plans, and are identified as being essential to the success of ecosystem initiatives. Each initiative was designed in relative isolation from the others, recognizing that regional ecosystem and socioeconomic considerations demand flexibility. This allows regions to respond to specific needs and emerging issues. Concrete examples of how each region has applied the principles are included.

Air pollution can cause harmful effects in people that range from annoying symptoms to death. There is now a large amount of scientific evidence that has shown that even the lower concentrations of air pollution we are exposed to in our cities and towns can cause effects on health. Particles in the air make up one component of the many impurities present in air pollution. These particles may be responsible for more serious health consequences than other components of air pollution. This document reviews the health effects of particles in the air, and then estimates the impact of the particles in the air British Columbia on the health of its people. Presents background information and a review of health studies; the inhalable particle health burden, the impact of inhalable particles and policy and regulatory implications. The investigators used special plasticizing additives in the material formulation to enhance the physical characteristics of the grout without detriment to its chemical durability. Laboratory investigations included studies of superplasticizer sorption, leaching tests on hardened grouts, and measurements of the hydraulic conductivity and porosity of the reference high-performance grout. The numerical model incorporated submodels for permeability and changes in grout composition to allow time-dependent changes in porosity to be related to performance.

The methodology involved combining available financial information on case-mix adjusted charge data from the State of Maryland with information on the mix of cases at each Manitoba acute-care hospital and actual Manitoba hospital budget information, with adjustments for factors expected to affect costs. The results presented indicate the differences among hospitals in the cost-efficiency with which they delivered care. MICROLOG 95-06773 (1 fiche)

This document provides guidelines on how to do an audit on seafood processing plant water, waste and wastewater. Provides information on what this type of audit is, why do one, who should do one, and how to plan for one. Provides instructions on the following steps: create a flow sheet of the plant, make a list of streams to be measured, measure flows and concentrations, develop a mass balance, classify the streams by flow rate and pollutant load, review and modify plant equipment and practices, and repeat the audit process after each plant improvement. A case study is included.

The HPSG-PL System, version 1.2 -- Rev.

The HPSG-PL (Head-driven Phrase Structure Grammar-ProLog Implementation) system consists of a lexical compiler, constraint processor, chart parser, and a module for linking the parser to a graphical interface. Using this system, a user can examine the properties of the HPSG formalism itself and can investigate characteristics of specific grammars that utilize the formalism. This document details how the system implements the distinguishing aspects of HPSG and describes modifications to the system which make Version 1.2 a far more complete implementation of the grammar framework, including some of the most recent developments in the theory, than previous versions and other extant implementations of HPSG environments. The appendix provides a sample grammar which covers a fragment of English.

The key hypothesis of this paper is that time use data bases make possible a broader view of the benefits and costs of human capital than is otherwise possible. This achievement is enabled by a set of integrated information on not only educational attainment but also on time devoted to formal and informal study, to paid and unpaid work of economic value, to work of civic value, to leisure activities, and to the educating of children by parents. This document looks at human capital and the use of time. Numerous statistical tables are presented.

This report describes results obtained from experiments conducted on anodically oxidized zirconium-niobium specimens. The samples were profiled for hydrogen concentration using the nitrogen-15 hydrogen profiling technique, the profiles being correlated with oxygen profiles obtained using a scanning Auger microprobe and with X-ray diffraction patterns. In addition, the report describes experiments on unoxidized zirconium samples containing 2.5% by weight of niobium and implanted with oxygen and hydrogen to study the interaction between those two species when dissolved in the alloy. The results indicate the nature of traps in the oxide/metal interface region of the zirconium niobium alloys used in the pressure tubes of Candu power reactors.

The prototype machine called Road Router is intended to increase mining productivity by improving underground roadbeds in hard rock formations. The Road Router employs a vertically mounted rotary percussive drill with a full-face button bit as a cutting tool to drill a series of overlapping cuts that penetrate the rock in a mine tunnel floor to a specified depth in order to create an extended flat surface. This report describes the development and testing of the Road Router prototype, mounted on a crawler-type vehicle and tested on various surfaces to establish how different rock structures would affect the resulting surface characteristics. The results reported include a cost benefit analysis, an evaluation of machine productivity, and a comparison of the quality and costs of Road Router surfaces with those of concrete road surfaces.

The Canadian Department of Fisheries and Oceans has been conducting bottom trawl surveys in the Gulf of St. Lawrence since 1971 to estimate the abundance and distribution of groundfish species. The Department also conducted comparative fishing experiments to test for differences in fishing efficiency between research vessels. Corrections for depth-dependent changes in fishing efficiency need to be used to compare relative abundance or distribution between years with different survey vessels. This report presents additional conversion factors required to convert all data to be comparable to catches of either the EE Prince or the Alfred Needler. The report also evaluates the impact of these depth-dependent conversion factors on perceived patterns in annual variations in cod depth distribution, and the impact on perceived variation in cod abundance of different adjustment procedures for changes in survey vessel fishing efficiency.

This paper extends the range of applicability of a linear method of correction for subsonic wind tunnel wall interference on airfoils, to cases where the local supersonic pockets are extensive yet do not reach the upper and lower test section walls. The paper describes a method for calculation of the transonic doublet and its inclusion in a farfield boundary condition of a finite-volume, time-stepping solver of the Euler equations. The paper also discusses the assessment of the wall interference on a lifting, supercritical airfoil, which takes into account the doublet effect at wind tunnel walls. The example presented is of a 0.3-meter-chord Boeing A4 profile.

A serious problem in international aid, from the perspective of both the donor country and the recipient, has been the lack of tools for monitoring and assessing organizational capacity. This book is intended to address that problem by assisting both external and internal efforts to strengthen organizations and by providing a framework for documenting the effects of such efforts. The framework touches on four main dimensions: key forces in the external environment, organizational motivation, components of organizational capacity, and aspects of organizational performance. The text suggests important considerations within each dimension as the focus of organizational assessments.

Herbicides were the primary tool for vegetation management on forest planning in British Columbia until the late 1980s when alternative methods of vegetation were investigated in order to reduce future use of herbicides. Sheep were first used experimentally for this purpose. These guidelines provide a description of the general planning process, and then project planning once sheep have been selected for vegetation management. It goes on to describe grazing operations with health management, shepherd training, communication, camp standards, sheep health and welfare, sheep management techniques, dog health, predator interactions, watercourse, monitoring and enforcement.

Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks, BC Parks, 1995. vi, 69 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl., fold. maps (Occasional paper / BC Parks ; no. 3) Cover title: Hakai Recreation Area, subtidal biophysical features of the Goose Islands. ISBN 0-7726-2459-3

This paper describes the subtidal features of the Goose Islands in British Columbia and includes the results of a marine field survey conducted using dive methods to describe representative subtidal communities to a depth of about 20 meters. The method of classifying and mapping the biophysical features of the islands was adapted from methods used to classify British Columbia shorelines as well as from terrestrial habitat mapping methods. Nearshore physical units based on exposure, bottom substrate, slope, and shoreline morphology defined subtidal areas with similar physical features. To describe biological communities, biophysical units were defined as a combination of species most characteristic of a community and its physical environment. The description includes 25 shore units, seven unique nearshore physical units, and eight distinct biophysical units. The field survey identified 231 plant, invertebrate, and fish species.

From 1987 to 1991, the Alberta Health and Social Services Disciplines Committee has been conducting an annual survey of professional association/regulatory organizations. In 1992, the Committee disbanded. In the same year, Alberta Health took over the survey and collected data from the health sector. This report contains information and statistical data on 44 health occupations for the year. The following information is reported for each occupation: functional definition; professional associations/licensing bodies; regulatory status; educational programs, enrollments and graduates; data on number of practitioners by geographical location, community size, health unit regions, and hospital utilization areas; and comparative workforce trends over a five year period.

As part of the provincial Timber Supply Review, the British Columbia Forest Service has examined the availability of timber in the Invermere Timber Supply Area (TSA). The analysis assesses how current forest management practices affect the supply of wood available for harvesting over both the short (next 20 years) and long (next 250 years) term. It also examines the potential changes in timber supply stemming from uncertainties about forest growth and management actions. Various harvest forecasts included in the report indicate only the timber supply implications of current practices and uncertainty. Provides a description of the area; information preparation, such as a land base inventory, timber growth and yield, and management practices; analysis methods; results; a timber supply sensitivity analyses; a summary and conclusions.

Of the many complementary strategies and tools required to develop a more sustainable society, one of the most important is to ensure that government decision-makers consider relevant environmental factors, and incorporate environmental values, in their policymaking processes. As part of the Canadian Environmental Assessment Research Council's involvement in government policy assessment, this report examines various issues in the environmental assessment of policy (EAP). It defines the terms 'environmental assessment' and 'policy', sets out the conceptual framework of analysis used in the report, and considers the following issues: procedural and institutional issues, including where EAP should be situated and general considerations regarding accountability and the role of the public; and information/values issues, including issues of prediction and evaluation as well as the relationship of EAP to final policy decisions.

The paper identifies three means of social influence on law and resulting social reform, then discusses each of these means using illustrations from Canadian (and sometimes United States) experience. The paper specifically notes the roles played by the Law Reform Commission of Canada and the Court Challenges Program of the Canadian Council on Social Development. The paper shows the influence of citizen behavior and individual expressions of injustice on the advent of social change through law, as well as the influence of special interest groups. The paper also demonstrates the flexibility of the law to meet temporal, cultural, and community-specific conditions.

The Salmon River Alvar Area of Natural Scientific Interest covers about 847 hectares of private land in Tyendinaga Township, Hastings County, Ontario. The significance of this area lies in its representation of extensive alvar plant communities, or areas of thin soils over essentially flat limestone bedrock, with a scant and unusual vegetation association. This report describes the regional context and physical background of the area, and presents an inventory of significant flora and fauna in the area. The author has identified some 31 vegetation communities including wetland, lowland forest, upland forest, and meadow types. The report concludes with evaluation and planning considerations for the area, which represents an important core feature in Ontario's system of natural heritage sites. Appendices contain lists of vascular plants and fauna observed in the field study of the area.

The collection and monitoring of precipitation in Manitoba has been on-going by the Manitoba Network for Precipitation Collection since the fall of 1980. The program provides a sufficient data base to determine the quality of precipitation with the emphasis on acidic substances, offers verifiable precipitation chemistry data to other jurisdictions, and determines any spatial or temporal trends in precipitation chemistry related to industrial and/or meteorological conditions within the boundaries of Manitoba. This report presents data accumulated during the year from stations located at Island Lake, Brochet, and Pointe du Bois. Daily precipitation summary and yearly statistical data summaries are given by station.

Manual for screening of buildings for seismic investigation

Institute for Research in Construction (Canada). Ottawa : The Institute, 1993. vii, 90 p. : Ill., Maps ISBN 0-660-15381-5
MICROLOG 95-06413 (2 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

This manual presents a rapid screening procedure for ranking buildings in an inventory for later, more detailed seismic evaluation. The methodology adopted is based on identifying the main features of any building affecting the risk of seismic hazards and the importance of the building as determined by its use and occupancy. Those features include the local seismicity, soil conditions, type of structure, irregularities of the structure, and the presence of non-structural hazards. Information for each building is collected on a standard seismic screening form which is used to obtain a score for a seismic priority index for each building. The manual includes background information and data required to complete the form, such as the earthquake behavior of buildings, instructions for implementing a building survey, and methods for obtaining pre-field and field data.

The Gulf of Maine is a highly productive water body with a reputation for clean water, unspoiled beaches, and high quality seafood. However, certain nearshore regions of the Gulf have been found to be polluted and all densely populated and industrialized areas of the Gulf are affected by local pollution sources. This fact sheet reviews the state of the Gulf of Maine environment, focusing on the threat to marine life from pollution. It examines the contaminants of concern, including heavy metals, pesticides, polychlorinated biphenyls, and hydrocarbons, and their implications for the health of marine organisms and humans. The fact sheet also notes recent trends in contaminant levels and actions being taken to restore and maintain the health of the Gulf ecosystem.

This report describes a project conducted to identify opportunities to develop a wood-based composite panel specifically for the Japanese market. The project developed a model to assess the development and transfer of an oriented strand board product that was new to the Japanese market for wood-based panels, and then assessed the specific attributes required to meet Japanese market requirements relative to competing panel products. Market research in Japan provided the primary data necessary to develop those attributes. The project then reviewed technologies for producing a panel that would have those attributes. The report presents the results of the market survey, including the important attributes identified in such categories as price and security of supply, and outlines the technologies determined as most appropriate for producing oriented strand board with the identified attributes.

Les ouvrages de la bibliographie sont divisés en quatre parties : questions préliminaires; causes, identification et évaluation; intervention; et, prévention. Les ouvrages de la partie I sur les questions préliminaires servent d'introduction générale à la question et permettent d'en préciser le contexte. La partie II sur les causes, l'identification et l'évaluation comprend des articles se penchant sur les connaissances actuelles sur la violence et la négligence en milieu institutionnel, en particulier leur fréquence et leurs causes. La partie III, intervention, porte sur les différents types d'intervention et sur les problèmes propres au milieu institutionnel. Finalement, la partie IV, Prévention, est axée sur la prévention des mauvais traitements et de la négligence.

This report presents results of a wind tunnel investigation of wing and fin buffeting measured in the Standard Dynamics Model, a generic fighter aircraft configuration. The investigators studied buffeting in three modes, the fin bending mode and the wing-symmetric and anti-symmetric bending modes. They conducted the tests in a 2-by-3 meter low-speed wind tunnel at four wind speeds corresponding to reduced frequencies ranging from 0.6 to 1.5 for the wings and 0.9 to 1.8 for the fin. The range of angle of attack was zero to 53 degrees and the sideslip angle was up to plus or minus 10 degrees. The model was also tested with or without its removable strakes. The report presents the data in terms of the buffet excitation parameter and analyzes the effects of angle of attack and sideslip angle on the magnitude of buffet excitation.

This document presents a preliminary analysis of data from a survey of merchants located in seven business revitalization zones of Calgary. The survey had three purposes: to confirm or dispute the hypotheses and findings of an earlier survey of pedestrians; to compare the merchants' perceptions of customer profiles and behaviors with the actual characteristics found in the pedestrian survey; and to determine whether successful retail practices in one zone might be appropriate for application in another. Survey questions included those related to merchant characteristics, perceptions of downtown safety, customer demand, geographic origin of customers, advertising, goods and services offered, store siting decisions, self-image, perceptions of the attractiveness of the business zone, and quality of services offered.

Environment Ontario and Environment Canada are working with the public to develop a cleanup or remedial action plan that will take an ecosystem approach to restore water quality and protect the aquatic environment of the Metro Toronto waterfront and watersheds. This discussion paper is being circulated as part of the ongoing consultation process and outlines seven remedial intents, each containing a number of broad remedial actions expected to be necessary to accomplish the intent. Each component action represents a program which can be undertaken to achieve the remedial action. The component action sections of the document contain a description of existing programs, potential improvements, monitoring and reporting requirements, and implementation considerations. The seven intents involve remediation of localized pollution; reduction of impacts of sewage, dry-weather pollution sources, and stormwater runoff; increase public awareness and involvement; foster ecosystem thinking; and conduct research in support of remedial action implementation.

SIMFUEL replicates the chemical state and microstructure of irradiated fuel by adding inactive elements to uranium oxide powder in amounts appropriate for the chosen burnups. Previous studies have determined thermal conductivities of stoichiometric SIMFUEL with equivalent burnups of 1.5, 3, and 8 atomic percent. The observed changes in SIMFUEL thermal conductivity reflect the dependence on burnup due to the contributions from solid precipitated phases and dissolved oxides in the matrix. Based on SIMFUEL results, this paper evaluates the effect of these two classes of fission products on the uranium oxide thermal conductivity. Degradation of the matrix thermal conductivity due to dissolved fission products, after corrections for the precipitated-product phases, was analyzed by considering their effect on the phonon heat current.

This paper describes results of an evaluation of a continuous-flow radiochromatograph detector system for monitoring tritium in CANDU service water. The system consists of a liquid scintillation flow cell between matched photomultiplier tubes, with coincidence circuitry for maximum efficiency and low background. The investigators tested the system with different samples of tritiated water and report its sensitivity, response time, efficiency, and potential ability to detect slow leaks.

More effective hospital care for Regina : a concept for rationalization of acute care services

Regina : Saskatchewan Health ; Regina Health Board (Sask.), 1992. 75 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 95-06624 (1 fiche)

The Regina Hospitals Executive Planning Committee (RHEPC) was set up in 1975 to encourage better understanding among the hospital boards, coordinate hospital activities and, through discussion of transferring services and rationalization, help them plan for facilities. Saskatchewan Health and the RHEPC agreed on the need for more consolidation and realignment of the services provided by Regina's hospitals. A study panel of external consultants was asked to act as facilitators and catalysts to achieve this goal. The study panel's purpose was to develop a blueprint to guide the overall planning for programs and services offered by the Regina hospitals. The report provides an assessment of needs in Regina and Southern Saskatchewan and a development of alternative models for delivery of care. A regional hospital questionnaire, information on the current status of Regina hospitals and their scope of clinical services are provided in the appendices. A variety of statistics on hospital use are provided throughout the document.

Baseline investigations of environmental quality in the Mt. Hunderer study area were carried out in June, 1988 and again in June 1990. These studies were in response to mineral exploration and eventual development of the Mt. Hunderer (Sa Dene Hes) lead/zinc mine. The surveys investigated water quality, sediment chemistry and percent particle size distribution, and benthic invertebrates in the drainage surrounding the mineral development area. Results and discussion are included.

Multiple account evaluation of rapid transit options for Greater Vancouver : BC Transit, 10 year development plan

Victoria : Crown Corporations Secretariat, 1995. viii, 34 p. : ill. On cover: 1995-2006. MICROLOG 95-06795 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this evaluation is to compare a range of rapid transit options for 3 corridors in Greater Vancouver: Broadway-Lougheed, Coquitlam-New Westminster and Richmond-Vancouver. The technologies considered for each corridor can be grouped into 2 categories: Rapid Bus, an enhanced bus service; and ICTS (Intermediate Capacity Transit Systems), a range of light rail alternatives. The multiple account evaluation methods used here are based on guidelines developed for the evaluation of major capital projects by provincial Crown corporations. The intent is to assist decision-makers in selecting among a range of options by providing a consistent assessment of how each performs in achieving policy objectives. These objectives are presented (Provincial Transportation Strategy, Livable Region Strategy/Transport 2021, BC Transit Strategic Objectives, and objectives for rapid transit). Next, transit corridors and technologies are described, followed by the evaluation methodology. Finally, the results of the evaluation are presented for each corridor and an appendix offers a sensitivity analysis of key results.

State of the Environment (SOE) reporting is an emerging municipal management tool designed to monitor and increase awareness of the current status, changes and trends in the condition of the local environment. This study is a multifaceted investigation that provides an overview of the current status of municipal SOE reporting in Canada. The results are reported through a literature review, reviewing the theory of SOE reporting; a case study analysis of SOERs produced in seven Canadian municipalities and an analysis of indicators used in nine municipal SOERs; and a survey of selected municipalities describing the results of a larger questionnaire survey of municipalities throughout Canada. The study concludes with the identification of future needs for municipal state of the environment reporting.

This paper presents a review of the components of an integrated waste management system and the roles of all levels of government, private enterprise and consumers. It discusses the historical background (garbage disposal to waste management), the Ontario blueprint for waste management, definitions of waste and the 4Rs (reduction, reuse, recycling, and recovery), the 4R hierarchy, public attitudes towards environmental regulation, and setting the example with waste audits and procurement policies. Next, the 4Rs are examined in detail citing specific programs (Municipal Reduction/Reuse Program, Industrial 4Rs Program, waste composition study, packaging reduction, Reuse Program, Municipal Recycling Support Program, Municipal Recovery Program, Ministry of Energy EFW Program, product labelling, material bans at landfill sites, tipping fees, and municipal waste collection user fees). Promotion and implementation alternatives and recommendations are also provided.

The Honourable Minister of Health requested advice on how to establish principles to assist in distinguishing essential from non-essential health care services. Representatives from national and provincial seniors' organizations and from provincial councils attended a one-day workshop organized by the Council to present their views on the principles that should underlie priority-setting in health care. Because seniors remember Canada prior to the development of its public health system, they have an important and unique role to play in any discussions regarding health care reform. NACA's position on determining health care priorities is informed by the views that seniors expressed at the workshop; throughout this report, views expressed at the workshop are quoted to highlight major points. As well, this report benefited substantially from the analyses of health economists and ethicists.

The National Pollutant Release Inventory (NPRI) was established to develop a national, publicly-accessible database of pollutants released to the Canadian environment from industrial and transportation sources. It provides a picture of releases to air, land, water and underground injection, and transfers in waste of a wide range of pollutants. Information provided by individual facilities has been supplemented by Environment Canada for some sectors that could not report on a facility-by-facility basis. The dept. has estimated releases from fuel distribution and mobile sources, which include all forms of transportation and mobile equipment. It also includes data on releases of greenhouse gases and common air contaminants. The report gives a background and overview of the NPRI, characteristics of the data, and national and provincial/territorial overviews. Next it provides estimated emissions from mobile sources and fuel distribution, then other air emission inventories. Data is provided in graphics and statistical tables.

Robert Bone's paper, Economic development and country food, explores the enduring importance of country food in the diet of Indian and Métis people despite the influence of the construction of the Norman Wells oil expansion and pipeline project. Next, Paul Kariya's piece compares the relative success of a sample of Ontario Indian university students with non-Indian university students in the workforce, looking at aspects of education and income. Finally, Frank Duerden's paper examines factors which led to the collapse of the 1984 Yukon land claims settlement agreement-in-principle. Occasional statistical tables are included.

Near-field mass transport from a point source (Instantaneously failed container) located in a disposal room

In the disposal of nuclear waste in long-lived containers, there is a finite chance that a small number of these containers would have initial manufacturing defects leading to pinhole-type failures. If the vast majority of the containers are sufficiently long-lived, only the release from the initially defective containers would need to be considered in modelling release rates from the disposal vault. In this study, it is assumed that the readily leachable fraction of the waste would dominate releases. The study models this fraction as a point source at the pinhole defect location, considering the containers to be emplaced in long disposal rooms backfilled with clay-rock mixtures. This report presents the modelling results, with numerical calculations for iodine-129. The study compares two approaches to modelling mass transport, a finite-element and a boundary-integral method.

A New approach to robust fault detection and identification (FDI) with application to a VTOL aircraft

This paper presents a new methodology for instrument fault detection and identification (FDI) in linear dynamical systems subject to plant parameter variations or uncertainties. The heart of the approach is a robust estimator which can simultaneously estimate the unmeasurable state variables of the system for the purpose of control and can also provide necessary information for FDI. A novel feature of this approach is that it can identify the shape and magnitude of the failures. The scheme allows for fast and accurate FDI, and can account for structural uncertainties and variations in the parameters of the system's dynamical model. The paper also describes the verification of the proposed overall fault-tolerant control system strategy through simulation studies performed on the control of a vertical takeoff or landing aircraft in the vertical plane.

This has led to initiation of the S-2000 program, designed to provide utilities with comprehensive field trials of SDHW systems. This document describes the S-2000 program activities in Nova Scotia, which involved cooperative pilot projects between utilities and government to install and monitor 32 systems, all located in Bedford. The SDHW systems selected for the study were manufactured by Thermo Dynamics Ltd of Dartmouth and consisted of a solar preheat storage tank and a separate electric auxiliary hot water tank, all retrofitted upstream of existing hot water tanks in each residence. Scan path design and built-in self-test have emerged as powerful design-for-testability techniques for very large scale integrated circuits. This paper considers the problem of compacting test response data captured in scan paths, focusing on commonly used linear compactors such as multiple-input signature registers and the effect of their characteristic polynomials on the number of aliased faults. The novelty of the analysis presented is based on a realistic error model which takes into account time correlation of the errors affecting test response data fed into the compactor. The analysis uses the notion of a compound compactor to simplify the analysis of time-correlated errors. The result of the analysis implies a number of conditions that should be satisfied to minimize aliasing.

The Ontario Growth and Yield Program is establishing and monitoring a network of over 4,000 permanent sample plots in natural and managed forests across the province. In the Program, field staff collect data on forest communities, lesser vegetation, site information, and wildlife habitat, as well as on timber growth and yield. The Program ensures the compatibility and integrity of collected data by providing minimum standards for establishing and measuring a permanent sample plot and by a quality assurance program, the procedures of which are presented in this report. The report outlines the personnel requirements for quality assessors, the quality assessment method, the types of errors occurring, and the requirement for continuous training of field staff. The appendix includes sample forms used in the quality assurance program.

This report examines six major health issues in the lives of youth (mainly those aged 10-19), focusing on areas where young people make decisions that affect their immediate and long-term health. The issues considered are tobacco use, alcohol use, road safety, healthy sexuality, physical activity and nutrition, and suicide and mental health. For each issue, the importance of the underlying health problems is noted, their causes are examined, prevention strategies are assessed, and some statistics on health problems are included. The primary source of information for this report is the 1990 Ontario Health Survey, which included nearly 7,000 youth in the survey population. In its discussion of prevention, the report focuses on areas where public policy can help guide the vast majority of youth toward health choices, with the goal of mobilizing the community to invest in young peoples' health. The intent of this report is to identify opportunities for the agri-food industry arising from changing immigration and ethnicity in Canada. The report reviews existing data on immigration and ethnic origin and of previous research into the food traditions, eating habits, and attitudes of ethnic consumers. It profiles three specific ethnic groups in terms of their demographics, history, and food traditions: Chinese, South Asians, and Middle Easterners. The report also reviews food spending by ethnic origin, ethnic consumer attitudes and behavior, and the influence on ethnic eating habits of their integration into Canadian society. The report concludes with a discussion of the implications of ethnic foods for the agri-food industry, evaluating opportunities in the replacement of imports of ethnic foods, development of value-added ethnic foods, and supplying of ethnic markets abroad. Optimal sequencing of dumpster collections and deliveries

This paper models and solves a complex routing problem associated with the collection and delivery of dumpsters. The problem is to sequence deliveries of empty dumpsters to customers, collection of full dumpsters from customers, and delivery of full dumpsters to dump sites. All collections and deliveries are made by a depot-based vehicle fleet and a vehicle can only carry one dumpster at a time.

Additional factors involved include dumpster size, number of deliveries per customer per day, length of working day, and the use of different dumps by different categories of customers. The paper proposes a mathematical model for the problem of combining dumpster collection and deliveries into feasible working days in order to minimize the total distance travelled by the vehicles. The paper also proposes two heuristics and an exact algorithm for solving the problem. Computational results using randomly generated and real data are included. PR PS QU SC TR

Optimum combination of carbon dioxide absorbent and scrubber canister for mission and emergency use in Submersible Diver Lockout 1 (SDL-1)

During the recent refit of a diving submersible, the existing carbon dioxide absorbent system needed replacement. This paper reports the results of experiments conducted to select the optimum alternative from the various absorbent systems available. Independent variables considered were absorbent type (lithium hydroxide or soda lime) and scrubber canister flow configuration (axial or radial). Dependent variables measured included capacity to absorb carbon dioxide, compatibility of absorbent with scrubber, relative hazard during absorbent use and handling, and effect of storage time on capacity to absorb carbon dioxide. The experiments also examined the performance of a prototype filter to reduce the dust hazard during scrubber operation. The report includes recommendations regarding the most acceptable absorbent system. CA EV ND PS SC

This paper presents a two-stage algorithm, sequential at each stage, for suboptimal output feedback and pole placement in linear multivariable systems. The algorithm uses an extended optimal linear quadratic regulator with an oblique projection at each of the two stages to obtain an output (projective) control law. The output feedback laws obtained in each of the two stages are of dyadic form. The overall output feedback strategy is then obtained from the sum of the two dyadic products. The paper considers two cases, a static output feedback controller capable of assigning a minimum number of poles and a controller in which dynamic compensation is used to achieve placement of all the system's poles. The paper includes an assessment of the algorithm's computational efficiency.

Some of these studies have considered the forest from the broad perspective of landscape units, and others have taken a closer view by studying the stands making up the forest. The report first discusses the problem of defining an old-growth forest and then describes the characteristics of old-growth white and red pine forests at the landscape and stand scales, including forest distribution and configuration, stand structure, soils, microhabitats, fauna, and biodiversity. The report then examines the differences of ecological processes in old-growth pine forests with respect to other ecosystems, and reviews how these forests change at the landscape scale and at the stand scale.

Seed orchards can be considered as one management option of tree improvement. However, due to the initial investment and intensive management required, they are the most expensive tree plantations in Canadian forestry. Insects and diseases can cause whole-tree mortality or affect potential cone and seed production by decreasing tree vigor and causing branch and shoot mortality. From 1990 to 1992 a total of 28 seed orchards were assessed twice each season for pest damage. These seed orchards include 16 black spruce, 8 white spruce and 4 jack pine. Trees were examined for insects and diseases and for levels of defoliation or woody tissue damage caused by pests. Document provides text and statistical information on diseases and pests found for each type of seed orchard.

This bulletin is written from the perspective of prairie agriculture and is intended to help farmers use pesticides safely. It provides information on the toxicity of pesticides, pesticide container labeling, avoidance of exposure, protective equipment, personal hygiene when using pesticides, maintenance of safety equipment, and symptoms of pesticide poisoning. The bulletin also makes recommendations regarding accidental exposure to pesticides, minimizing exposure of pesticides to the environment and to other humans and animals, and procedures to follow in case of a pesticide spill. An appendix contains recommended procedures for pesticide container rinsing and disposal.

This report provides information on a method of placer gold dredging, a method that differs from conventional bucket-line dredging in that it uses a combination of land-based and floating dredging equipment. An excavator is used for digging the gravel, and a floating processing plant is used to process the gravel and stack tailings. The report discusses design details and specifications for the equipment used, with general design information given for each of the components of the dredging system. The report also outlines operating procedures, such as equipment assembly and startup, mining through a deposit, shutdown, and reclamation of the mined area. Detailed specifications of Fortymile Placers equipment are included as an example.

Une surveillance ("monitoring") environnementale intégrée nécessite des systèmes d'information et de données qui permettent le développement de modèles interdisciplinaires qui relient des éléments provenant de sciences distinctes comme celles de l'écologie et de la météorologie, pour former une approche écosystèmes. Une telle approche comprend la gestion des données, des raffinements en informatique particulièrement en ce qui concerne le stockage, les réseaux, les systèmes de fichiers répartis, les outils de visualisation et de gestion étendue de base de données réparties. Ce document donne l'aperçu général d'Environnement Canada (mandat, programme, et organisations de gestion de l'information), et décrit la planification stratégique des affaires et de la gestion de l'information. Il donne aussi le plan directeur pour le renouvellement des services gouvernementaux, et il offre l'orientation de la gestion de l'information (vision; objectifs; cadre de la politique; stratégies d'information, des applications, et des technologies RL/LAN et GR/WAN - réseaux locaux et grand réseau; et activités de soutien, architectures cibles des technologies de l'information et sécurité). The 1995 amendments to the Ontario Planning Act made planning in Ontario more efficient, more accountable, and more protective of the environment. This bulletin is intended to highlight the changes that affect planning in northern Ontario under the new planning system. It reviews the distinctive features of the north that make northern planning different, the authority to approve plans, the role of planning boards, notification and public meeting requirements, and policies that guide development in the north. Those policies relate to natural heritage environmental protection, economic and community development, housing, agricultural land, and mineral resources.

This study explores the role of the police in cases of parental child abduction. The study is essentially a literature review to assess the police reaction to reports of parental abduction, the dimensions of the phenomenon, and the physical and psychological harm that is likely to be caused to those involved. The review also takes into consideration any other factors that might affect the actions of the police. It discusses parental perceptions of police response to abductions, the problems confronted by police in investigating cases of child abduction, and the effects of abductions on the children and the searching parent. Finally, the study offers suggestions for police response to parental abductions, including institutional responses and operational procedures.

Cet exposé porte sur la relation entre les objectifs de la politique de concurrence et ceux de plus large portée de la politique économique se rapportant à la restructuration industrielle et à la compétitivité internationale. Bien que les auteurs se soient intéressés principalement au Canada, ils ont aussi étudié la législation et les politiques de concurrence d'autres grands pays industrialisés. Outre les politiques actuelles, ils se sont penchés sur diverses questions entourant le rôle que jouera à l'avenir la politique de concurrence, compte tenu de la tendance à la mondialisation de l'économie des années 90. L'exposé comprend sept parties : la politique de concurrence à une époque de mondialisation; les principales caractéristiques de la politique de concurrence du Canada; les rapports entre la politique de concurrence et les autres politiques économiques; la politique de concurrence dans différents pays; et, l'avenir de la politique de concurrence au Canada.

This guide and workbook were developed to provide an introduction to the concepts and principles of pollution prevention planning and its implementation; to offer a model to initiating a pollution prevention team planning exercise within an organization; and to provide a series of easy-to-follow worksheets and checklists that would help guide the planning process from assessments through prioritization and implementation. The approach is based on a total quality organization framework; an integrated, multi-media assessment of pollution impacts; and conceptual models, procedures, and protocols that force attention to the front-end of industrial processes and all waste management systems. Suggestions are also given for an economic analysis of pollution prevention projects, including financial and economic assessment tools, limitations and deficiencies of financial analysis, and annualized net costs and net present value calculations.

Les variations enregistrées au titre de la distribution des salaires horaires, l'accroissement de la dispersion des heures hebdomadaires de travail et l'augmentation de la corrélation entre les salaires horaires et les heures hebdomadaires sont documentés dans les sections IV, V et VI, respectivement. The Japanese housing market is larger than the entire North American market, with over 1.6 million starts in 1994. Japanese housing is expensive, costing as much as 8-10 times average salary. Government initiatives are aimed at reducing that cost to an average 5 times salary. One government initiative is a series of actions to open the market to imported housing components and kits. This increases the availability of material, challenges some of the high labour costs in Japan, and puts price pressure on local producers of housing. This report presents an analysis of the feasibility for a plant producing pre-cut house components for shipment to Japan. It presents the terms of reference, market opportunities, the current industry structure, investment considerations and requirements, and operating and financial plans. Conclusions include a summary of operations and risk factors, risk mitigation, and limitations of the analysis.

Test response compaction is widely used to reduce the amount of test response data in the testing of microelectronic circuits. Such compaction often implies an information loss, resulting in some faulty circuits being declared fault-free; this situation is referred to as aliasing. This paper reviews some of the most fundamental results on aliasing available in the research literature. It begins with an introduction to microelectronic circuit testing and a discussion of some concepts necessary to link practical problems with theory. It then introduces the most commonly used compactors, discusses definitions of aliasing probability, and presents probabilistic fault models with a discussion of their practical validity. Further chapters analyze aliasing in linear and counter-based compactors and the practical implications of the presented results.

Au printemps 1992, Forêts Canada (aujourd'hui désigné sous le nom du Service canadien des forêts) annonçait le renouvellement du Programme d'aménagement forestier des terres indiennes (PAFTI) pour une période de quatre ans (1992-96). Les principaux objectifs du programme sont de mettre en valeur les ressources forestières des terres indiennes, d'accroître l'expertise autochtone en aménagement intégré des ressources forestières et de contribuer à la formation des autochtones et au transfert de connaissance vers les communautés. Ce rapport est divisé en 4 parties : les auteurs présentent les différents intervenants engagés dans le programme; ils font un bilan des activités réalisées sous chacun des volets du programme; ils précisent les modalités et les structures de mise en oeuvre du programme; et, enfin, ils font le point sur les exercices de planification et d'évaluation réalisés au cours de l'année. Ils y dressent en plus un plan d'actions découlant de l'évaluation effectuée auprès de la clientèle du programme.

Sediments provide habitat for many organisms and influence the fate of many chemical substances in aquatic ecosystems. Benchmarks of environmental quality are required to support protection and management strategies for such ecosystems. Sediment quality guidelines can be used to assess sediment quality, to help set targets for sediment quality that will sustain long-term aquatic ecosystem health, and to develop site-specific objectives. The document outlines the procedures for deriving scientifically sound national sediment quality guidelines, including the National Status and Trends Program approach and the spiked-sediment toxicity test approach. The document also includes guidance on how the guidelines are to be used in conjunction with other types of information, along with a generic example for illustration.

This report assesses the impacts of MSMA use, including its behavior and fate in the environment when used for forest insect control, the toxicology of MSMA and its toxicity to humans and to terrestrial and aquatic species, the routes by which MSMA may be ingested by humans, and the extent of exposure to MSMA from treated trees, including exposure to sawdust and smoke. The report concludes with an assessment of the MSMA health risk, including graded or consistent effects and the risk of systemic toxicity. favoriser le développement des assureurs du Québec. Ce rapport annuel traite d'abord de la mission et de la structure organisationnelle de la Direction. Il fournit ensuite des informations sur l'identité des assureurs qui détiennent un permis pour exercer au Québec. Il contient aussi des données sur la situation financière des assureurs et les résultats de leurs opérations. Finalement, on y trouve des données statistiques sur les primes, les sinistres et les assurances en vigueur.

Cette étude repose sur l'Enquête Promotion de la santé de 1990 et sur l'Enquête sociale générale de 1991. Les résultats de l'étude sont regroupés en cinq sections : les fumeurs; l'âge du sujet quand il a commencé à fumer; le nombre de cigarettes fumées; l'abandon du tabac; et les répercussions de l'usage du tabac. Dans la dernière partie du rapport, nous nous penchons sur des variables qui se rapportent au sujet à l'étude, mais qui ne faisaient pas partie de l'étude. Nous proposons que soient menées des recherches qui permettraient d'approfondir certaines questions tout en incluant ces variables. Nous évaluons en outre la disponibilité des données relatives à ces variables dans les deux enquêtes auxquelles nous avons eu recours.

This paper reviews and synthesizes existing information on acorn collection and quality assurance, acorn stratification and storage, bare-root culture of red oak seedlings, container culture, and direct seeding of red oak. Recommendations are included on such matters as ensuring stock quality, root pruning, control of predation by small mammals, site preparation, and sowing methods.

One way to increase the passive safety of a CANDU pressurized heavy water reactor is to decrease the contact conductance between the pressure and calandria tubes during loss of coolant situations. Such a decrease would help prevent the calandria tube from going into film boiling. This report summarizes the results of a test to demonstrate the degree of reduction in the contact conductance. The test incorporated a wire screen in the fuel channel annulus next to the inner surface of the calandria tube. It had been suggested that the screen would effectively reduce the heat transfer rate during pressure tube/calandria tube contact and the calandria tube would remain in nucleate boiling. As a control in the test, part of the experimental assembly did not have a screen between the pressure and the calandria tubes. The results reported compare the performance of the control and screen-equipped sections of the experimental assembly.

This document explains the theory and the method by which the major parks of the provincial parks system contain and represent British Columbia's diverse natural environment. This explanation has three main parts: an introduction to the concepts, a description of the geographical units employed, and a discussion and overview of the application to the provincial parks system. The central concept in this document is 'regional landscapes,' or land and marine geographic segments of the province that are each reasonably distinct in terms of the occurrence and patterns of the major constituents of the natural environment. A regional landscape can be described by identifying its general location, terrain appearance and typical landforms, typical vegetation patterns, typical wildlife occurrences, presence of water bodies, and the general climate. The document defines 57 such landscapes for the province.

Nova Scotia. Regional Public Libraries Funding Review Committee. Halifax : The Committee, 1995. 29 p.

To achieve the benefits of a more consultative approach in the funding of library service, the Library Funding Review Committee was established in 1993 to make recommendations to the Deputy Minister of Education and Culture. This work group has representation from key stakeholders in the library community, including chief librarians, trustees and municipal representatives. The terms of reference and composition of the Library Funding Review Committee build upon the achievements of and the direction provided by the previous committee. The specific objectives of the Committee for 1995-96 are: to encourage regional library boards, municipal councils and the N.S. Library Association to provide input to the Committee; to re-visit the established 'Principles of Library Funding'; to examine the funding arrangements for the 1994-95 fiscal year and isolate both the positive features and any deficiencies; to allocate the operating grants budget for regional public libraries; to outline concerns that result from reduced funding; to explore ways of using existing resources to provide a more cost-effective service; and to identify and describe alternative revenue sources.

The purpose of this workshop was to consider the establishment of a Mixed Wood Plain Ecological Science Centre node in the Carolinian area of southwest Ontario. This area is bounded by lakes Huron, St. Clair, Erie and Ontario, and is characterized by intensive agriculture, the petrochemical industry, and major urban centres (e.g. Windsor, Kitchener-Waterloo, London, Hamilton and Guelph). The workshop had three principal goals: to provide an overview to the effort to improve ecological monitoring and research throughout Canada by considering goals and objectives of an ecological Science Centre for the Mixed Wood Plain ecozone and identify the potential significance of an anchor site or node in the Carolinian area; enable a first review of the diversity of monitoring and research in the area; and that it would be the first steps towards the organization and management of a Carolinian node of the Mixed Wood Plain Ecological Science Centre. Recommendations and a list of participants are included.

School smoking prevention programs : a national survey

This study had three objectives: to determine the extent to which smoking prevention programs are offered in Canadian schools; to assess the extent to which existing programs meet efficacy criteria; and to identify program gaps that need to be addressed. The study methodology included telephone surveys with spokespersons for government departments of education and health, national organizations involved in smoking prevention, and a randomly selected but balanced sample of small and large school boards (elementary and secondary). The efficacy criteria provided a basis for assessment of programs, guidelines, resources, and curricula in four areas: focus, content, deliver, and implementation or adoption. This report presents the findings of that study and the recommendations for improving school-based smoking prevention across Canada. The appendix contains a directory of Canadian smoking prevention programs.

The West-Central BC Caribou Research Project was set up to investigate potential effects of logging on caribou in the Tweedsmuir-Entliako and Itcha-Ilgachuz-Rainbow areas. The original studies were expanded to include more intensive investigations of winter range and population parameters. The objectives of the project were to determine seasonal movements, habitat use and food habits of caribou in these areas, especially during winter so that logging guidelines compatible with caribou winter habitat use could be developed; and to determine population size, calf production, and calf and adult survival, so that current population status and limiting factors could be determined. This report summarizes results on caribou seasonal movements, habitat use and food habits. The report discusses methods for capture and marking, seasonal movements and habitat use, snow measurements, winter feeding ecology and fecal analyses. Results and discussion are also provided for these as well as for winter forest cover type use.

A Semi-mechanistic approach to calculate the probability of fuel defects

This paper describes the current status of a semi-mechanistic approach which expresses the probability of nuclear fuel defects in terms of fundamental parameters such as local stresses, local strains, and fission product concentration. The calculations of defect probability continue to reflect the influences of conventional parameters such as ramped power and burnup, but the new approach now provides a mechanism to account for the impacts of additional factors involving detailed fuel design and reactor operation. Examples of these additional factors include pellet density, pellet shape and size, sheath diameter and thickness, pellet/sheath clearance, and coolant temperature and pressure. The paper presents a validation of the approach against a previous empirical correlation and an example showing how the defect thresholds are influenced by changes in the internal design of the fuel element and in the coolant pressure.

Past analysis of aliasing probability has only dealt with combinational faults, i.e., those that do not convert a combinational circuit into a sequential one. The results are valid for stuck-at faults or a certain class of shorts between lines, unfortunately, they are invalid for delay or stuck-open faults, which are commonly encountered in practice and convert combinational circuits into sequential circuits. This paper studies aliasing for delay and stuck-open faults. Results are based on the assumption that the linear compactor has an irreducible characteristic polynomial. Some recent results on combinational faults are special cases of the results presented in this paper.

The overall purpose of this research project was to review programs within service provider organizations across the aboriginal, multicultural and regional communities of Canada. Phase 1 was a research consultation among people with expertise and contributed to the development of theoretical models to explain the dynamics of elder abuse and these communities. The goals of Phase II, this report, were to examine various service agencies in order to determine the suitability of different models and services in meeting the needs of a wide range of abused older Canadians and to examine accessibility of services given ethnic and regional differences. It also aimed to examine the dynamics of abuse through qualitative case studies and chart extractions. The final phase will produce a guide for communities to enhance the development of services to address abuse of older people. This report discusses methodology and the results of agency surveys and focus groups. Client records and face-to-face interviews are also covered before recommendations are offered. Issues touched on during these surveys and interviews include ethnic-cultural diversity, geographic diversity, language of services, service problems and challenges, demographic profile, abuse and neglect, characteristics of clients and alleged abusers, environmental issues, intervention strategies, types of abuse as predictors, explanations for abuse, urban and rural diversity, and cultural diversity.

This paper presents a method for recovering the shape of a single Lambertian surface, with unknown but uniform reflectance, from a single red-green-blue (RGB) image of the object. The method depends on the linearity of the relationship between RGB sensor responses and surface normal directions that stems from the Lambertian model. The algorithm follows closely upon work on the photometric stereo method, which requires as input three separate black-and-white intensity images, each taken separately. In contrast, the method proposed in this paper needs only one color image, and the lighting color must vary with direction from the surface for the method to succeed. The author tests the method by including three separate point light sources, all contributing to the illumination of the scene. The paper provides the results of the tests, including the degree of recovery of surface normals up to an overall orthogonal transformation.

ELOCA.MK5 is a FORTRAN-77 computer code developed to model the thermo-mechanical response and associated fission-product release behavior of CANDU fuel elements during high-temperature transients such as large-break loss of coolant accidents (LOCA). This paper reports the results of model runs conducted to simulate two in-reactor LOCA experiments, using ELOCA.MK5 in the Mk4S mode. Mk4S is a thermo-mechanical mode capable of performing a multi-segment analysis of a CANDU fuel element, accounting for axial variations in sheath temperatures, metallurgical regions, and reactor neutron flux. The first LOCA experiment consisted of four elements subjected to a coolant depressurization in the Power Burst Facility at Idaho Falls. The second consisted of a single fresh element, with an artificially set internal gas pressure, subjected to a coolant depressurization in the NRX reactor.

The transient performance of a communications network is of considerable importance in practical applications such as predicting the performance of a network in overload conditions. This paper presents an analytical model to characterize a random access network, using a carrier sense multiple access protocol as a basic model. The performance metrics considered are the relaxation time, or the time difference between the introduction of an impulse of messages and the time at which the systems reaches an average system backlog due to background traffic load; the trajectory of the number of backlogged stations; and the stability of the network. The model is verified using the SIM-SCRIPT II.5 simulation language.

Users of socio-economic statistics, particularly for public policy purposes, have expressed a continuing demand for an integrated and coherent system of such statistics. An important constraint on this demand is the absence of an agreed conceptual approach. This paper briefly reviews the state of frameworks for social and economic statistics, including the kinds of socio-economic indicators that users may want. The paper then shows how a coherent structure of such indicators might be assembled. A key implication is that this structure requires a coordinated network of surveys and data collection processes, and higher data quality standards. Since the data of interest are dynamic, the method proposed goes beyond statistical matching to microsimulation modeling. The paper illustrates these ideas with preliminary results from the LifePaths model currently under development at Statistics Canada.

This report reviews and evaluates data considerations in the conduct of life-cycle assessments. The report focuses on data relevant to Canada and considers three principal issues: which data should be collected and how various life-cycle analysis considerations affect the data to be collected; how data quality can be assessed; and sources of data appropriate for use in life-cycle analyses of Canadian packaging, and their applicability in the different regions of the country. The report discusses the stages in the life-cycle and the availability of data related to energy consumption, emissions, and solid waste generation for the following materials: aluminum, glass, paper, plastic, steel, and wood. The appendix contains a list of data sources reviewed; each source citation describes the characteristics of the data, along with its use, accuracy, coverage, and variability.

ATLAS (A Tactical Landscape Analysis System) is a simulation model which allows examination of short- and long-term effects of spatial harvesting restrictions and silvicultural treatments. The model allows examination of forests on a block-by-block basis and reports timber volumes and areas harvested, a complete history of treatments for each forest polygon, road network activity, and delivered wood costs. This document summarizes the basic ATLAS structure and then describes the ATLAS program, version V1.2. The description includes how to install ATLAS on a computer, an overview of the menu system and data files, procedures needed to make different simulation runs by altering the input files and control parameters, and guidelines for creating custom data sets.

In addition to providing an annual overview on the state of Canadian forestry, the report places particular emphasis on Canada's forests as a source of commercial timber, and on management and environmental issues related to timber production. A national forest account is introduced to show the changes in the forest resource as it is depleted by harvesting, fire and insects, and replenished through reforestation and intensive management activities. Data are included from the mid-1970s to the present on exports by province and their value, their contribution to the balance of trade, employment, and types of materials produced.

Concerns regarding the quality of stormwater runoff and its impacts on aquatic resources have led to a need for an improved approach to municipal planning to protect receiving waters. Accordingly, various best management practices (BMPs) have been developed to meet that need. This report reviews the literature on existing BMPs and outlines the planning context for BMP selection and integration into watershed and urban planning. It then addresses the selection, design, implementation, and costs of structural BMPs for handling stormwater runoff. Structural BMPs refer to ponds, infiltration and vegetative techniques, wetlands, and underground storage facilities which are implemented as part of a development or remedial program to correct existing stormwater problems. The report also proposes a work program to enhance current knowledge of BMP operation and effectiveness for Ontario conditions. Appendices include a glossary, details on existing Ontario BMPs, and a summary of a BMP workshop.

A model which predicts the fate of oil stranded on coarse sediment beaches is under development. This model has been modified in light of new information to incorporate data from expanded databases on oil spills and results from column experiments. This paper describes the model and results of experiments conducted to test and improve the model. The experiments included simulations of tidal washing of a sediment column using two oil types (weathered and emulsified) and three sediment types (pebbles, granules, and mixed). The paper discusses the modelling of porosity, permeability, residual oil capacity of sediment, weathering rates, and tidal and sediment zonation in light of the experimental results.

In the design of very large scale integrated circuits, once a large investment has been made in a standard cell library and a collection of module generators, it can be very difficult to keep up with changes in technology. This paper describes efforts undertaken to solve that problem at an institution where a generic collection of 3-micron design rules has been established over time and where some redundancy has been built into the database to permit compatibility with multiple foundries. The paper presents various strategies for scaling including post-scale mask manipulation, strategic use of wires, algorithmic design rule independent layout, and some new ideas which permit hierarchical scaling. These strategies result in scalable metal-oxide semiconductor rules which provide acceptable to good performance and space efficiency from 3-micron processes down to 0.8-micron processes.

This paper describes experimental sediment column tests used to isolate important factors that contribute to retention of oil spills on beaches. The tests simulated tidal rise and fall across a sediment column, and the stranding of the oil on the sediment during a falling tide. Three sediment types were used in the experiments: granules, pebbles, and a 50/50 mixture of granules and pebbles. The investigators made observations on depth of penetration of the oil, oil/sediment coloring, and oil layering characteristics. They identified two general sediment/oiling conditions, impermeable and permeable. The paper discusses the experimental results in terms of penetration and retention potential of the sediments.

Western yew (Taxus brevifolia Nutt.) has been of negligible commercial importance in British Columbia because of its small size and rarity relative to other commercial tree species. However, recent discovery of the anti-cancer properties of taxol extracted from yew bark has led to increased harvesting of western yew, and current harvesting policy may not be adequate to accommodate the future need for bark and to ensure sustainable western yew populations. This report reviews the biology of western yew, including its distribution and abundance, habitat, growth, development, reproduction, response to disturbance, wildlife interactions, genetics, and taxol content. The report then makes recommendations for western yew management at the stand level and at the landscape level.

Summary report on recommendations for regulations under the Occupational Health and Safety Act of Nova Scotia

Nova Scotia. Occupational Health & Safety Advisory Council. Indoor Air Quality Working Group. Halifax : The Group, 1995. 23 p. : Bibl. (Document / Nova Scotia. Occupational Health & Safety Advisory Council ; 1) On cover: Document No. 1.

Workplace concern over indoor air quality is likely to be one of the most common problems for owners, employers, and employees in the nonindustrial workplace. This has led the Nova Scotia Occupational Health and Safety Advisory Council to review the current Occupational Health and Safety Act and its regulations to determine what changes are required to ensure legislation is up to date with respect to indoor air quality. This report outlines the Council's review process and the rationale for regulating indoor air quality. It then summarizes and discusses the recommendations regarding changes to the legislation in the areas of ventilation standards, carbon dioxide as an indicator of air quality, building design and documentation, upgrading of existing buildings, building maintenance and operation, control of exposure to airborne hazardous substances, complaint and investigation procedures, and information/education.

Support interference assessment in rotary experiments using the orbital platform concept

By P.J. Penna and M.E. Beyers. Ottawa : National Research Council Canada, Institute for Aerospace Research, 1994. vi, 40 p. : ill., Bibl. (Aeronautical note / Institute for Aerospace Research (Canada) ; IAR-AN-79)

The researchers undertook a flow visualization study to investigate the unobstructed vortical flows generated by a cone-cylinder model in steady coning motion at high angle of attack. Using an orbital platform apparatus in a water tunnel, spatial measurements of vortex breakdown could be made with and without a rotary support sector downstream of the model. This permitted a direct assessment of the type of support interference found in conventional rotary balance apparatuses, and generated, for the first time, rotary flows for a coning model unobstructed by a downstream support. It was found that such support interference can be significant under conditions of steady asymmetric vortex shedding, confirming the findings of previous analyses. This report demonstrates the viability of the orbital platform concept for determining the ranges of applicability of conventional rotary balance data.

Probabilistic models (for geosphere, biosphere, and disposal vault) have been developed to predict nuclide transport in groundwater to the surface and biota resulting from release of nuclides from nuclear fuel wastes buried in vaults deep in plutonic rock. This report describes the surface water submodel of the biosphere model, which is a simple, generic mass balance model of a Canadian Shield lake. In the model, nuclide input to the lake from compacted sediments is the time-dependent mass output from the geosphere model. The surface water submodel then calculates nuclide concentrations in lake water and sediment; these values are used in other biosphere submodels to predict the radiological dose to biota. The paper discusses the selection of parameter values for the model and presents a sensitivity analysis of the model and results of model validation tests.

In December, 1994, the Task Force was given a specific goal of developing a strategy to deliver educational activities promoting sustainability in Ontario. The Task Force believes that education is key to building a sustainable future, and that educational efforts should have a strong sustainability focus. The Learning for Sustainability Strategy presented in this document aims to engage stakeholders in a collaborative, consensus-based planning effort to make sustainability a major component of school-based learning. The strategy involves the implementation of priority actions and the formation of a partnership committee and working groups. This report proposes a mandate, roles and responsibilities,

This study compares the cost of living of different types of households in eight urban centers in Canada and the United States. The comparison was made by calculating the cost of living of six different types of households in each urban center, using constant socio-economic characteristics to define income, type, and size of residence, the number, type, and use of automobiles, and the profile of goods and services consumption. The methodology enables calculation and comparison of differences in the cost of living which stem from differences in both the price of goods and services and the tax burden. The study results include comparisons of specific components of the cost of living, such as housing, transportation, and health and education services, as well as the household tax burden. The focus of the study is how the cost of living in Montreal compares with that of the other cities.

Circuit designers use two basic strategies to make a complex integrated circuit self-testable: using one universal built-in self-test (BIST) technique, or using a combination of BIST techniques. The circular self-test path (CSTP) technique has the potential to overcome the problems of insufficient testability associated with those two strategies. This report reviews the principles of the CSTP technique and its applicability to designing self-testable very large scale integrated circuits. It then describes and assesses a CSTP-based self-test scheme for random access memories. The report concludes with a more detailed comparative analysis of the test quality for the CSTP-based solution and the schemes based on deterministic patterns. BC PR PS SC

Certain of their public service reforms are innovative efforts to solve long-standing dilemmas in public administration, and aspects of these reforms may be worthy of adoption or adaptation by the government of Canada. This study focuses on the reform of the core public service in New Zealand, examining the principal stages of a decade of reforms including commercialization, corporatization, and restructuring, plus fundamental changes in the approach to management and accountability. The study attempts to explain the origins of the reforms, their evolution, and their progress to date. This paper describes two different types of photochemical oxidation technologies used to destroy trace organics in wastewater containing oil and grease. It presents experimental results on the removal of volatile and extractable organic contaminants using two photochemical oxidation units, one employing a combination of ozone gas and ultraviolet light at the 254 nanometer wavelength and the other a three-phase system using a titanium dioxide catalyst with gaseous or liquid oxidant and ultraviolet light. The investigators evaluated two chemical oxidants, in addition to the oxygen dissolved in the water: hydrogen peroxide and compressed air. The paper compares the performance of the two oxidation units in terms of their effectiveness in removing or reducing concentrations of various classes of organics wastewater from an oil coalescer.

This document presents a broad strategic planning foundation for future transportation projects to the year 2021 for the Regional Municipalities of Hamilton-Wentworth, Haldimand-Norfolk, and Niagara, plus the County of Brant. This area bridges the Greater Toronto Area and the United States and is important in terms of agriculture, tourism, and international trade. The plan balances five important objectives: economic development, environmental protection and sustainability, social equity, user needs and safety, and responsible fiscal management. The emphasis throughout is on using existing transportation facilities and services more effectively. The plan assesses all transportation modes, including pedestrian, bicycle, air, water, rail, public transit, and road, and considers integration of these modes as the key to meeting future transportation demands.

In the fall of 1994, the tree fruit industry in the Okanagan and Creston regions requested a reconsideration of the tree fruit industry revitalization policy and programs. A Tree Fruit Consultation Forum was established to review the industry situation. This report provides an assessment of the financial conditions, aspects of competitiveness, and prospects for the tree fruit sector in British Columbia. It relies on standard financial, economic and other information which can be updated as new information becomes available. The assessment uses both published financial information and other relevant data to provide an overview of the industry and to examine its financial status. It is supplemented by two studies, one undertaken independently of, and prior to the consultation forum, and the other forming part of the consultation process.

ionization chambers have been successfully used to measure low-level tritium levels in air for radiation protection purposes. Problems have been encountered in applying this technique to measure much higher concentrations of tritium in gases other than air, particularly argon and helium. This report presents the results of an experimental program initiated to investigate the various factors that affect the response of ionization chambers. Carrier gas effects on the measurement of elemental tritium were investigated in the concentration range of 0 to 150 curies per cubic meter.

The authors consider two algorithms for solving generalized monotone variational inequalities. Both algorithms work on a reformulation of the variational inequality as a convex feasibility problem. The first is an interior point method based on the computation of analytic centers, and the convergence proof does not rely on volume reduction arguments used for the ellipsoid and related methods. The second algorithm is a standard cutting plane procedure. Both algorithms generate sequences of points that are feasible with respect to the primal constraints. Those sequences contain at least one subsequence that converges to an equilibrium solution.

MICROLOG 95-06379 (1 fiche)

This paper presents a two-phase model of a fluid-saturated geologic medium with groundwater velocity, rather than hydraulic conductivity, as the primary model parameter. The model describes the groundwater flow, contaminant transport processes, and geologic medium structure at the local scale of a continuum representation and relates structure to processes quantitatively. In the model, the heterogeneity of a geologic medium is characterized either in terms of the spatial variability in bulk fluid density and sediment density, or in terms of variability in the local-scale porosity and effective grain diameter. The local-scale continuity equations resulting from these properties are derived for both phases. The model uses effective grain diameter to quantify the geologic structure and velocity to quantify the transport processes. The observed correlation between effective grain diameter and velocity leads to a new formulation of Darcy's law and to development of the local-scale groundwater flow equation.

The Use of radiotracers to evaluate gold losses at Klondike placer mines, phase II : 1989 mining season

Sluicboxes are simple, reliable, inexpensive, and yield very high concentration ratios, which explains their popularity and predominance in Yukon's numerous placer gold mines. Testing sluicboxes with conventional sampling and evaluation techniques is very costly, laborious, and problematic due to large random errors induced by the nugget effect. Nuclear tracer tests are more accurate, faster, cheaper, and safer. This paper presents results from a radiotracer study of the recovery efficiency of several sluicing systems at Yukon placer gold mines. Four distinct sizes of radiotracers were used and their recovery was related to the design and operational characteristics of the individual sluicboxes and their pay gravels. The report also estimates overall gold losses, evaluates the effect of screening on gold recovery, and discusses the effectiveness of various kinds of sluicboxes and their features.

Theoretically, very fine sediment sampling (under 53 microns) has the potential to improve the usefulness of stream sediment data for gold. The key theoretical advantages over traditional techniques are less local sample site variation, improved reproducibility, and the potential to preferentially define anomalies associated with significant bedrock mineralization. This report provides a literature review of silt sampling and heavy mineral concentrate sampling, technical requirements for sediment sampling in gold exploration, the definition of anomalies, and practical application of the fine sediment sampling technique (sample size requirements, sample separation methods, and analytical techniques). The report notes the potential for fine sediment sampling to aid in the exploration and discovery of new ore deposits in the Yukon.

Summarizes the status of constructed wetlands located strictly in Canada, and includes descriptions of the types of constructed wetlands, their applications, performance, costs and their national distribution. Interviews held with over 100 Canadian individuals and agencies provided the basis for this understanding of the diversity of constructed wetland systems operated or planned in Canada. It also provides guidelines for a feasibility assessment and for the construction of wetland treatment systems as well as an extensive bibliography on all aspects of wastewater treatment wetland systems.

Water quality data : Ontario lakes and streams, 1990 : vol. XXVI, west central region

Toronto : Ministry of Environment & Energy, 1994. lxvii, 225 p. : Maps, Bibl. ISSN 0843-5855 MICROLOG 95-06140 (4 fiche)

The data in this report result from a routine sampling program designed to provide a long-term record of the water quality at specific points on rivers and inland lakes in west central Ontario. The information is used to maintain surveillance over water quality conditions and to provide supporting data for analysis and prediction of water quality for planning or other purposes. The report describes the analyses and measurements conducted at the sampling site and the general characteristics of substances measured. The bulk of the report consists of tables of data collected at the various sampling sites. Information in these tables includes sampling hour, date, location, and depth; water characteristics such as pH, temperature, and conductivity; bacteria counts; and concentrations of contained substances such as calcium, iron, copper, chloride, and organics.

The Waterfront Trail is a project to connect many of the existing parks, pathways, natural areas, and activity areas on the Lake Ontario waterfront. This book is a guide to the Trail, arranged geographically from west to east and organized into chapters on 18 sections of the waterfront from Hamilton to Trenton. Each chapter provides information on travel directions, parks, cultural attractions, natural areas, linkages to other trails, and other places of interest. Throughout the book are vignettes giving brief descriptions of people, places, natural phenomena, and historical events related to the waterfront region. Includes a table of amenities and attractions in the municipalities along the Trail, as well as an index.

The white pine weevil, Pissodes strobi Peck, can be found in nearly all regions of Canada and the U.S. It causes severe deformity and growth losses by damaging a tree's leader, which results in reduction of merchantable wood volume. These attacks threaten Sitka spruce plantings by the forest industry in B.C. In eastern Canada it limits the planting of eastern white pine and spruce. The goals of the White Pine Weevil Workshop were to consolidate current scientific knowledge and to map out a strategy for future research and funding requirements. 33 papers were presented on weevil research and management including biology and damage; genetics, weevils and hosts; and silviculture and control.

The Whitehorse Copper Belt extends parallel to the Alaska Highway for 30 kilometers, four kilometers west of Whitehorse, Yukon. The Belt is a north-west-trending chain of copper-bearing skarn deposits that were mined from 1898 to 1982. This paper reviews the geologic history of the Belt, outlines early exploration and mining activities, a history of exploration (1946-90), open pit mining (1967-71), the latest stage of underground mining (1972-82) in the Belt, and the ore processing techniques used. The focus of the report is on the technical aspects of mining and ore processing, intended to provide background information to aid in the development of historical presentations for secondary school students. The report also describes the geology of the nine major deposits in the Belt and estimates the total value of copper production from the Belt and the amount of outstanding reserves. A glossary is included.

Who uses prescription drugs? Results from a population-wide study in Saskatchewan

By Kevin Quinn, Margaret Baker and Bob Evans. Regina : Saskatchewan Health, 1992. 188 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 95-06460 (2 fiche)

This study employs the database of the Saskatchewan Prescription Drug Plan to describe in detail the prescription drug use in the province. The methodology used in the study provides several measures of the use of about 490 drug entities categorized into 120 drug classes and groups, by almost one million people grouped into 42 age-sex groups and 15 residence categories. The results presented focus on cardiovascular, central nervous system, and anti-infective drugs. Information given includes extent of use, use by gender and age group, and differences in use of drugs among different regions of the province. Includes index.

Why has inequality in weekly earnings increased in Canada?

By René Morissette. Ottawa : Statistics Canada, Analytical Studies Branch, 1995. 60 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research paper series / Statistics Canada. Analytical Studies Branch ; no. 80) French ed. (Pourquoi l'inégalité des gains...) : 95-06610/1. ISBN 0-662-21733-0 SCC 11F0019MPE MICROLOG 95-06570 (1 fiche)

Inequality in weekly earnings increased in Canada in the 1980s, in conjunction with a drop in real hourly wages of young workers, a fall in the percentage of employees working 35-40 hours per week in their main job, a rise in the fraction of employees working 50 hours per week or more, and a growing tendency for highly paid workers to work long workweeks. The paper examines the role of weekly hours of work and the correlation between hourly wage rates and weekly hours in explaining the rise of inequality in weekly earnings in Canada over the last decade. It also documents changes in the distribution of hourly wages, the growth in the dispersion of weekly hours of work, and the increase in the correlation between hourly wages and weekly hours. The paper concludes with a review of the possible factors behind the rise in weekly earnings inequality in Canada.

Window and door thermal performance requirements in Canadian building codes

Many organizations have started using the Canadian Standards Association A440.2 window energy ratings and U-values in the specification and promotion of high-performance windows. However, it appears that there is a wide variation in thermal performance requirements and versions of this and other standards referenced. This project sought to compare these energy performance levels for doors and windows in residential and commercial building environments. This report reviews the requirements for two programs (R-2000 and Power Smart) and five building codes (current Canadian codes, the proposed 1995 National Energy Codes, and the American Society of Heating, Refrigeration and Air Conditioning Engineers 90.1 and 90.2). The report presents results of comparisons made for five Canadian cities, with residential requirements shown on the basis of ER number estimated from handbook characteristics if only the U-value was specified.

The role of technical innovation in economic growth is both a current matter of keen public policy interest, and active exploration in economic theory. However, formal economic theorizing is often constrained by considerations of mathematical tractability. Evolutionary economic theories which are realized as computerized microsimulation models offer significant promise both for transcending mathematical constraints and addressing fundamental questions in a more realistic and flexible manner. This paper sketches XEcon, a microsimulation model of economic growth in the evolutionary tradition.

Le rôle de l'innovation technique dans la croissance économique est à la fois une question qui intéresse beaucoup la gestion des affaires publiques et un domaine de la théorie économique où la recherche est active. Or l'élaboration de théories économiques est souvent limitée par des considérations de résolubilité mathématique. Grâce aux théories économiques évolutives qui sont élaborées sous forme de modèles de microsimulation informatisée, on peut raisonnablement espérer surmonter les contraintes d'ordre mathématique et aborder les questions fondamentales d'une manière plus réaliste et plus souple. Cet article donne un aperçu de XEcon, qui est un modèle de microsimulation de croissance économique de type évolutif.

Since the replacement of the Juvenile Delinquents Act by the Young Offenders Act in 1984, various reactions to the philosophy of the new act and studies of its impact on juvenile justice have been recorded in the literature. This document contains an annotated bibliography of such literature. The references are arranged alphabetically by author (or title, if no author is stated) in three categories: general information on juvenile justice and the Young Offenders Act; literature discussing dispositions under the Act; and literature on various diversion programs. The bibliography includes articles appearing in Alberta newspapers and a provincial magazine in order to give a presentation of the local situation and the concerns of those in the field. These articles are placed at the beginning of each section and are arranged chronologically to outline developments since the Young Offenders Act came into force.

Ce bulletin se propose d'expliquer les dispositions relatives au zonage qui figurent dans la Loi sur l'aménagement du territoire, dans sa version modifiée de 1995. La loi permet différents genres de zonages et donne aux municipalités des mécanismes à courte et moyenne échéance pour régler certaines situations qui sont particulières à leurs régions. La loi lie expressément le zonage aux questions d'ordre environnemental et archéologique. Le bulletin comporte deux annexes. La première se compose de deux graphiques dont le premier illustre le processus en matière de zonage, tandis que l'autre illustre le processus en matière de dérogation mineure. La deuxième annexe comporte un aide-mémoire qui permet à l'utilisateur de gérer les dossiers de demande de zonage.
